This is a tumulus which is placed at b.m. 337 on the summit line of the high ground called the Ridgeway, which runs diagonally across the Tenby-Castlemartin peninsula. It was opened in 1851 (Arch. Camb., II, ii, 291, ill.), but nothing was discovered to mark the mound as sepulchral. Since that date it has been much altered. There is, however, no record of any further systematic examination of it having been attempted. It has a present height of about 5 feet.—visited, 31st May, 1922.

Old Castle.

This earthwork has suffered much and not least from the military activities of the recent war. It was visited in 1871 by Lieut. Col. W. Ll. Morgan, R.E., SF.S.A., a retired Royal Commissioner, whose description of it is as follows:-

"A natural hollow running from sea to sea cuts off a small promontory from the main line, which is been turned into a fortress by a series of fortifications on the southern slopes of the hollow. The eastern end of the promontory ridge is cut off from the remainder by a small natural ravine at right Angles to the hollow, which has been utilised as a roadway. The eastern side of the ravine, flanking the roadway, has been scarped, this scarping - 12 feet high - turns at right Angles along the side of the Hill for 90 yards, after which it descends the slope as a bank and ditch for 60 yards and terminates in a small inlet at the eastern end of the hollow. Thirty feet in front is a second bank and ditch with a small counterscarp bank beyond. There are signs of scarping of the hillside in front of the scarping mentioned above, but they are very indistinct. The western side of the ravine is taken up by a rectangular-shaped enclosure, which is divided from the western portion of the Promontory ridge by a second and smaller ravine.

This work was necessary on account of the high ground on the edge of the cliff. The western portion of the ridge is taken up by a possible out-work, with two banks on the side of the Hill, but it is doubtful if they can be considered as fortifications. The hut circles are numerous and perfect.

Skomer Camp.

Lydstep

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 44 N.W.; lat. 51° 38' 35", Long. 4° 46' 2").

A promontory camp, situated half a mile due south of the village of Lydstep, not shown on the Ord. sheets. The earthwork is defended on three sides by steep and perpendicular cliffs, and on the land side by a massive rampart and ditch which have partially disappeared. The bank has suffered from exposure this bleak spot; it is at its best on the west, where it rises 10 feet and falls 80 feet a 9 feet ditch; it has a present length of about 100 feet. The entrance the enclosure was at the north-eastern angle. The interior is rocky and barren.

East Moor.

East Moor was the home of the Lorts in the 17th century near it is another farmstead called West Moor. Sampson Lort, second son of Henry Lort of Stackpole Court, established himself at East Moor. Like his father he served on both sides during the Civil War. His first wife Olive was a daughter of Sir John Philipps of Picton. She died in 1637, and four years later Sampson married Lettice, daughter of Thomas ap Rhys of Rickeston (Brawdy) and Scotsborough. He was High Sheriff in 1650, and died in 1667. His only son, Thomas Lort succeeded to East Moor; he married Elizabeth White of Henllan, but died without issue. A few references have been found to East Moor. In 1670 Thomas Lort was assessed at seven hearths, indicating it to have been a commodious residence.

An inventory of the possessions of Thomas, compiled in 1687 mentions the following rooms in East Moor - Hall the little room within the Hall the little parlour, chamber over the outward kitchen, 'another little room', closet, little room over the entry, chamber over the kitchen, closet within the said chamber, buttery, kitchen, outer kitchen, larder, dairy, and outhouses.

Over a hundred years later, Fenton wrote in 1811 - 'Turn to the left to see Moor, one of the chief mansions of this district about two hundred years ago, of a very irregular form with many ruinous and extensive out-buildings, once entered by a gateway now stopped up, leading to a porter's lodge. With very few exceptions, this may serve as a model of the style of building their houses among the great of that era in this country which invariably appears to have been surrounded by a high court-wall having a large arched gateway, and essentially differing from the form of the principal houses of the same date, in the upper part of the country.

Commissioners of Ancient Monuments who visited the site in 1923 state that in the farmyard to the west of the modern house were the ruins of a small E-shaped two-storied dwelling house 'of no architectural importance'; in its original state it may have consisted of a Hall with North and South wings, and central porch, but most of the features had disappeared leaving only the Hall which had been altered almost out of recognition.

After the departure of the Lorts the house changed ownership several times.

The Land Tax of 1786 names four messuages, each called East Moor, as follows:

- (1) Sir Hugh Owen, owner, Peter Gwyther tenant, assessed at £3.18. 0.
- (2) Peter Gwyther, owner-occupier, assessed at 7s.5d.
- (3) Thomas Voyle, owner, Peter Gwyther tenant, assessed at 14s
- (4) George Leach, owner, Peter Gwyther, tenant, assessed at 14s 6d.

From this it seems that the dwelling of the Lorts was (1).

The Pembrokeshire Archaeological Survey (1896-1907) states that in the farmyard of East Moor is an ancient house now used for farm buildings, probably the dwelling of Sampson Lort.

Norchard. Manorbier.

Just south of The Ridgeway, and north of Lydstep. Formerly a commodious residence of an ancient landowning family, built over a continuous vault. It is now a farmhouse. The earliest residence of which we have any record was that of Looney, also spelled as Lymy and Lang. Thomas Looney left no sons and Norchard passed to his daughter and heiress Isabel who married Lawrence Marychurch who settled at his wife's home. Between 1400 and 1600, eleven generations of his descendants lived at Norchard. The origin of the family is unknown, and the name was often rendered as St. Marychurch by Dwnn. Five of the name served as Mayors of Tenby in the period 1501-1526. When Dwnn recorded the pedigree and arms on 10 November 1591, John Marychurch signed, and gave five shillings to the herald for his travail.

The family remained at Norchard until the latter half of the 19th century. In 1670 William Marychurch was assessed at seven hearths for Norchard, and Maud Marychurch and Francis Marychurch were each assessed at one hearth apiece. The male line seems to have failed shortly afterwards, and when Mary Marychurch married on 1673, John Williams of Gumfreston, and Pant Howel (Carms), who then settled at Norchard which passed to Mary's descendants.

Mrs. Mary Williams had two daughters who married two brothers - Mary to John Meyrick (d. 1732), and Alice who married Francis Meyrick (d. 1741) In 1786 Norchard was owned by John Meyrick esq.. (of Bush), with Nicholas Roch as tenant. Thereafter Norchard was farmed by tenants.

NOTE: A family of Marychurch lived in Haverfordwest from the 17th century, where they were successful tradesmen, mercers and glovers. William Marychurch, a Royalist, was elected Mayor of the town in 1653, but was fined and ousted from the post at a suite in Haberdashers Hall London. In 1694 William Marychurch was Sheriff of Haverfordwest, and Mayor in 1694; in 1829 Joseph Marychurch was town sheriff, and in 1865, Mayor of the town. The family also owned property at LLawhaden

Norchard Farm Mill, Manorbier

The mill dates from at least 1699, and is depicted on a plan of 1772. It is built into the bank of the large millpond which also served a waterwheel attached to the barn in the north ranmge of the farm buildings . The mill has two storeys, the upper floor accessed from the top of the dam; there are no internal stairs. The waterwheel is missing, though its axle remains in situ; inside the mill machinery survives but in very poor condition. The tailrace is culverted under the farm track to the south

Bier Hill or Whitehill Mounds

About 300 yards west of Norchard Beacon is a group of three tumuli now about 5 feet in height and 180 feet in diameter at the level. The middle mound was examined on the same occasion as Orchard Beacon. A stone grave 9 feet Long was disclosed, and within it a skeleton at full length. The body had been laid east and west, the head being to the west. At a later period another of these mounds was opened, when a plain urn, 6 inches in height, now in the Tenby Museum, was discovered. Two other urns were also found, but their present location is unknown (Pem. Arch. Survey). There is also in the Tenby Museum a rubber or pounder stone from the Ridgway but whether from any of these tumuli is not stated. — visited, 14th April, 1915.

Manorbier Airfield

Of the wartime buildings, a Bellman hangar is still in use. The catapults installed to launch the Queen Bee drones (radio controlled De Havilland Tiger Moth planes) are still visible, as is the base of the Pickett-Hamilton retractable pillbox.

Event and Historical Information:

This airfield comprised an army camp with a small grass field runway which was initially used as an anti-aircraft training school and was established in the mid 1930s. The first unit to be based here was B Flight of 1 Anti-Aircraft Command Unit in 1937. Most of the early accommodation and workshop space was formed from canvas tents. By the 1939, the Pilotless Aircraft Unit was based permanently at Manorbier and brick buildings had begun to replace canvas. The runway was enlarged in 1940 and also acquired catapults to launch Queen Bees from the clifftops so that gunnery practice could be continued when the grass runways were too wet and flooded. Airfield defences included a Pickett-Hamilton retractable pillbox which could be fitted with different calibre guns and could be raised and lowered hydraulically. A tender was used to retrieve the drones from the sea and return them to Tenby harbour. The drones would then be returned by road to the base. The Pilotless Aircraft Unit continued to use the airfield after the war. The airfield continues in use by the army today, primarily for helicopters.-- RCAHMW, June 2008.

Lydstep.

Unusual, in that the village was largely built by the first Viscount St Davids, who also built a large house for himself in Lydstep Haven. Nowadays the land along the shore is a large and beautifully landscaped caravan site. In the village are the ruins of the mysterious medieval Palace of Arms, an early first floor house above two vaulted cellars of undercrofts badly neglected

Lydstep House

Lydstep House belonged in early 19th century to the Adams family of Holyland, Pembroke. It was remodelled and extended in 1894 with a new wing and Arts and Crafts interiors. The house is pebble-dashed, with a slate roof and red brick chimneys. There is a Long, low 2-storey central block with gabled cross wings. Now in use as a club house for Caravan park. The Palace, or the Palace of Arms.

Lydstep

In the village of Lydstep, a little way from the north side of the Tenby to Manorbier high-road, stand the ruins (long used as a quarry) of a house known locally as the Palace, or the Palace of Arms. Whilst many of its features existed and were identifiable, it was described and illustrated in Arch. Camb., 1867, III, xiii, 336 where it is stated to have been sometimes called a hunting-seat of Bishop Gower of St David's, but no authority for the statement is given. As shown by the then existing foundations and walls, the building had a frontage of about 22 yards. The lower part contained several vaulted rooms, most of which were without windows or fireplaces and probably were cellars.-- visited 19th May, 1922.

(5 July 2013 being put up for sale by Pembrokeshire County Council – grade 1 listed building)

On the opposite side of the road was a second, and in some respects a similar house, or possibly two distinct houses, of which no traces now remain. - visited 19th May, 1922.

Laws said that he was told by his nurse, a native of Lydstep that according to traditional usage the house on the north side of the road was "The Palace" and that on the south side "The Place of Arms".

There is also the legend that Aircol Llawhir a 4c King had his palace at Lydstep.

Lydstep Palace, Lydstep

Medieval house traditionally known as the 'Place of Arms', perhaps becoming mutated to 'palace'. Probably the place where the manorial court of Manorbier and Penally was held. Peat Deposit, Lydstep Haven

Bronze Age

An extensive peat deposit which was uncovered by exceptionally high tides during the Winter of 2009-10. In the surface of the deposit a number of footprints were visible, both of human and animal form. Many of the footprints were quite confused, suggesting that people were milling around on the edge of what would have been a wetland area bordering a lake or lagoon in the Bronze Age. Some distinct sets of tracks of human and animal origin were also determined. in particular, foot prints appearing to be of red deer were clearly recorded.

On 24th June 2010 the RCAHMW laser scanned the surface of the deposit in conjunction with Deri Jones and Associates, allowing a complete and objective recording of the extent of the deposit and footprints to be made.

Landing Place, Swan Lake, Freshwater East

A track shown on OS 1st edition 25in mapping leading to the former Swan Lake cottage and connecting to East Moor Farm suggests a landing place. Modern aerial photography shows pathways still providing access to the beach. The landing place may have some considerable longevity of use, as evidenced by the finding of worked flint and the remains of burnt mounds by A. Manordeifi,

Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1838 - Manordeifi

A parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kilgerran, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (S. E.) from Cardigan, and 6 (W. N. W.) from Newcastle-Emlyn; containing 963 inhabitants.

This parish is bounded on the east by Kenarth, south by Llanvihangel-Penbedw, west by Kilgerran, and north by the river Teivy, being situated at the north-eastern extremity of the county, bordering upon Cardiganshire and Carmarthenshire. It comprises a considerable tract of arable and pasture land, inclosed and in a good state of cultivation; the surface is finely undulated, and the scenery, which is enriched with thriving plantations, and enlivened by the course of the river, is generally pleasing, and in many parts picturesque. The Teivy abounds with Salmon, in taking which many persons are employed; and trout, sewin, and other fresh-water fish, are also to be found in it. Some tin-works were formerly established here, and a canal connected them with the Teivy below Llêchrhŷd bridge, to which place that river is navigable for small craft; some excellent quarries, also, for flag-stones, have been opened, principally on the glebe land, but they are not now worked.

This vicinity is ornamented with several gentlemen's seats; the adjoining country is richly wooded, and affords some fine s of the Vales of Teivy and Cych, which here unite, abounding with features of romantic beauty.

Pentre, formerly the seat of the family of Saunders, is now, by marriage of the heiress of that family with the father of the present owner, the property of D. Saunders Davies, esq.. It is a handsome and substantial modern edifice, erected on the site of the old mansion, and embosomed in flourishing plantations; the grounds, notwithstanding that they retain to a considerable degree the ancient style, are finely laid out, and from their elevated situation command some extensive prospects, embracing part of the Valle of Teivy, the town of Cardigan, and the Irish Sea in the distance.

Fynnonau was once the property of the Morgans of Blaenbylan, who sold it to Captain Stephen Colby, R.N., uncle of the present proprietor, John Colby, esq.. It is an elegant modern house, erected from a design by Mr. Nash, and beautifully situated in groves and plantations; the grounds comprehend some romantic scenery.

Clyn is also a handsome residence pleasingly situated, and embellished with scenery of interesting character.

The living is a rectory, rated in the King's Books at £9, and in the patronage of the Crown. The tithes of the whole parish have been commuted for £345, of which a sum of £265 is payable to the rector, who has also a glebe of forty acres, valued at £50 per annum; and the remaining £80 to Miss Jones. The Church, called St Davids, is a small edifice, situated near the river, and not remarkable for any architectural features; it has been partly rebuilt of late: the churchyard has been thickly planted with trees, principally by T. Lewis, esq..

There was a Chapel of ease at Cîlvawr; but it has been in ruins for many years: the great and small tithes of this part of the parish belonged formerly to W. O. Brigstocke, esq., of Blaenpant, but are now the property of Miss Jones, having been purchased by her late brother, Morgan Jones, esq., of the former gentleman. There are places of worship for Baptists and Calvinistic Methodists; a day school in connexion with the Church, supported by the neighbouring landowners; and three Sunday schools, connected with the dissenters. The room in which the day school is held is licensed as a Chapel of ease. Dr. Erasmus Saunders, rector of Moreton-in-the-Marsh, and author of "Short Illustrations of the Bible," and an excellent tract on the duties of families, was born at Pentre, in the parish.

This Chapel would appear to have been from 1394 to 1501 united with Llangolman (which was probably the old name for Capel Colman), as all the presentations are to the two benefices. The presentation of 2 May, 1394 was made by the King; but all the subsequent incumbents were presented by a number of patrons, who were presumably freeholders of the district. In 1594 the Chapel was in the queen's hands. Owen Pem.

has now entirely disappeared, not a stone of the edifice being left to Mark the site.

The field whereon it stood has been ploughed for years, but the position is known. The Chapel was about 400 yard; from the new parish Church of Manordeifi, which was built in 1895. The present impropiator of the title of the Chapelry of Cilfowyr, commuted at £60, is Mr. Arthur P. Saunders

Lost Churches In Wales. Oct. 30, 1863.

To The Editor Of The Arch. Camb.

Sir,—For the information of an " Old Member," I herewith send you a list of several lost churches. In the parish of Clydey, Pembrokeshire, celebrated for its inscribed stones of an early Christian date, there exists on the farm of Plas yr bendy an oblong-square mound, the site of a lost Chapel called " Cappel Mair" (St. Mary's Chapel). The ruins are covered with turf, but easily traced. The mother Church of Clydey contains a very ancient monument to the memory of a family living at Cappel Mair, probably at Plas yr Hendy.

In the adjoining parish of Manordify are the ruins of another Chapel, called " Cilvowyr," the tithes of which now belong to a lay impropiator.

There is a large Baptist Chapel below the ruins.

The Church of Castellau, near Clydey, is also in ruins, and has been so for more than a century : the tithes are impropriate. There is a large Baptist Chapel at Blaenfos, within a short distance of the ruins of this parish Church.

Pembrokeshire Parsons.

This benefice was at an early date in the patronage of the Earl of Pembroke, and afterwards came into the hands of the Crown.

Under the name of Ecclesia de Manordaun, this Church was in 1291 assessed at £6 13s. 4d. for tenths to the King. - Taxatio.

Manerdeyby.—Ecclesia ibidem es presentacione dicte Regine at Eupra [i.e., Marchionisse Pembr'] unde Willelmus Clement est rector valet communibus axis £9. Jade decima 18s — Valor Eccl.

Under the heading 'Livings remaining in Charge':- Manerdivy alias Maenor Deifi R. (St David). The Prince of Wales. King's Books, £9, £90. Yearly tenths, 18s. — Bacon's Liber Regis.

The old Church of Manordeifi is situated on low ground in the valleys of the Teifi, near the river and at the foot of the bank under the present rectory. Occasional services are still held there, but being in the least populous corner of the parish, a new parish Church was built in 1895, about a mile from the rectory and near the cross-load on the way to Boncath. This Church was opened in 1896.

In 1905 the Rev. D, Ambrose Jones, the present rector, restored the falling roof and walls of the old parish Church, and in the course of the restoration two windows of Early English type, which had been plastered over and filled up with rough stones and clay, were discovered.

One of these windows – a small narrow one - was restored, but the other one - a fine double window - was not interfered with for special reasons.

Abercych In 1897 an iron Church was erected at, a village in this parish.

The Parish Church dedicated to St David. (The “old Church”)

This building known locally as the “old Church” is but occasionally used for service, a new and more conveniently situated parish Church having been erected in 1899. The old Church appears to date from about the period 1250>1300. It was restored early in the 18th century. In the course of a recent renovation two Early English windows were uncovered. One of these lights 21in by 17in splayed to 40in by 44in on the south side of the chancel was restored, but the other, described as a “fine double window” was not interfered with”for special reasons” (Trans West Wales Society p288). The building consists of a chancel 27 ½ ft by 16 ¾ ft and nave 38 ¾ ft by 20 ¾ ft, with a west porch and single Bell cote. All the windows, except the last noted have wooden frames. In the north and south walls of the nave are two open fireplaces. The chancel and nave are rudely flagged. The font has a square bowl ornamented with quatrefoils. The basin chamfers off to a circular shaft having roll fillets, on a square base; it is probably coeval with the Church –visited 7th July 1915.

The old Church of Manordeifi was taken on by the Friends of Friendless Churches in 2000, following its closure. It is listed Grade II* and survives as a rare example of an unaltered 'pre-ecclesiology' interior. The chancel and nave date from the 13th or 14th century, the west porch being slightly later. The building was modified in the 18th century, and retains fittings from that time including a full set of box pews, the easternmost with fireplaces to warm their occupants, the westernmost slightly raised and decorated with fluted columns.

The font is 13th century, and the Bell, which was recently restored, dates from the late 15th century. Manordeifi also boasts several fine monuments - including one to Charles Colby who had the unfortunate distinction of having been killed by a tiger in India in 1852.

When in use the Church would often be cut off by the overflowing Teifi river, and a coracle has been kept in the west porch to assist stranded worshippers.

St David's Church, Manordeifi is a stone-built medieval Church on an ancient site dedicated to St David. It consists of a chancel and nave, with a stone gable-bellcote and porch at the west end and a later vestry on the north side of chancel. There are some 14th century Early-English mullioned windows in the chancel south wall and an early square-bowl font ornamented with quatrefoils. By 1899 a new Church had been consecrated, built on a Hill nearby clear of the flood plain, and the old Church declined until its recent restoration in 1905 and again 1948-73. The box-pews remain; two which are taller with fluted columns at angles and plainer box-pews of various dates in between and then two larger pews fitted with fireplaces.

A modern recess in the outside of the 13c west tower contains a monument to the Lewis family. The nave and chancel are also 13c, but the one surviving old window is 15c. The north wall was rebuilt in the 19c.

Within the lower band is inscribed " POCVLVM » ECCLESIE » DE » MANERDEVI ". The knop which has a fillet above and below equally divides the stem and is covered with intermittent lines. There are three bands of vertical line moulding, the first immediately beneath the bowl, the second and third on the base. The Paten cover is quite plain, measuring 4 in. in diameter, 1 in. high, and weighing 3 oz. 7 dwts.

Manordievi

An agricultural area in which the labourers receive 7s per week on their own finding. There is a resident Clergyman and resident land proprietor as well one farmer pays of over £100 per year. . £34 is annually subscribed for education. The majority of the parishioners could not read or write.--

Rev W Lloyd Manordivey Rectory.

Parish of Manordivey – Village School

I visited this school on the 3rd of February in company with the Rector. The room is licensed as a Chapel of ease, and contains a pulbit and gallery. It is rather small for the number of scholars, especially as the gallery is not made use of; but on the whole is not a bad schoolroom.

This school , like that at Kilgerran is maintained by the neighbouring landowners, and the children of the poor are educated in it gratis. The master and mistress receive 10s per annum for each scholar, and a guarantee that their income shall not be less than £34 per annum. I found present 29 boys and 30 girls.

Nine read a portion of the 2nd chapter of Genesis, all with tolerable ease. They were able to give Welsh translations of various English words proposed to them from the chapter. The master understands no Welsh.

Nine girls read the seventh chapter of St Mark; did not know the meaning of “reject” [the Rector told me that their ordinary Welsh vocabulary would furnish no equivalent term]

Ten boys read the same chapter [it was the custom for them to read the second lesson of the following Sunday]

One child gave basic arithmetic answers with reference to money very readily. The girls were taught sewing.

NewChapel School

This is a day school held in a Chapel of the Calvanistic Methodists which is not in a good state of repair. The roof and several parts of the floor were very bad. The school is unsectarian. Some of the subscribers to the Manordivey day school occasionally subscribe for one or two children at this school. The furniture comprised a table, and seventeen benches, many of which are used by the scholars as desks, writing on their knees. The master has had long experience as teacher, and spoke English tolerably well.

Farmer's mechanics and labourers children were the scholars. They were not present to be examined, the master being unwell. – visited 25th January 1847 Wm Morris Assistant.

Bronze Celt

In 1922, when ploughing a field on the farm of Penrallt Coch, a looped and socketed bronze celt in good preservation was discovered. It is 3 ½ in long, is ornamented on either side with three parallel raised ridges, and has a rich lustrous patina. Now in the museum of the Carmarthen antiquarian Society – seen 6th June 1923. RCAM

Ffynonau Mansion; Ffynone, NewChapel

Ffynonau Mansion was built c.1790, and designed by John Nash. It is 2 storey with a Welsh slate roof. Alterations include a Doric Portico built c.1830 and new wings built 1904. The Nash interior is unspoiled. There is an attached stable with clock tower, cupola and weathercock.

The house is square plan of five-bays. The basic window spacings and 12-pane sashes remain. Alterations were made to layout of ground floor interior, but Nash's design survives on the upper floor. There is fine Gothic plaster to the c.1830 entry and a fine cantilvered stone stair. The Edwardian plastered ceilings are in c.1700 style. The building is listed as one of Nash's early works, and one of the finest Edwardian works in Wales. Earthworks at Castel Maelgwyn

About half a mile east of Castle Maelgwyn House are faint traces of an earthwork of oval form, but the site has been extensively disturbed by quarrying as to permit of no further description – visited 7th July 1915.

Castell Malgwyn Fenton, Tours 1810

“The house of Castle Maelgwn is an elegant modern building, affording a suite of handsome apartments and most commodious offices, and is pleasingly situated on a beautiful projecting slope, lying between the navigable river Teivy on the one side, and a retired pastoral stream that murmurs through a most romantic valley diversified with rock and wood on the other. The intermediate space as well as the whole of this valley, forms a pleasure ground in design and arrangement of which, the greatest taste is displayed. Below the house, between the Teivy, stood very extensive iron and tin works, that the present proprietor had taken down; by the removal of which, the banks of this beautiful river have reasserted their original character”.

Castell Malgwyn Bridge

was built by Sir Benjamin Hammet in 1799 to carry the Llechryd-Boncarth road over a newly built (1772) canal which supplied power to the Castell Malgwyn Tinsplate Works. It is a shallow-arched rubble stone bridge with a cut stone arch. On either side are cast iron keystones with Sir Benjamin's crest (Castle and crossed cannons motif), with on the east side 'Castle Malgwyn Bridge 1799' and on the west 'Sir Benjn Hammet 1799'

Castell Malgwyn Tinsplate Works

1. "An extensive manufactory of tin plates, which was formerly carried on, has for some years been entirely discontinued, and the buildings have been demolished."

Source: Samuel Lewis, A Topographical Dictionary of Wales, 1833. B.A.Malaws, RCAHMS, 19 June 2006.

2. The exact date of the establishment of the Tinsplate Works at Castell Malgwyn is unclear with the most reliable source noting that they were first established in 1771 by the Penygored Company (Walter Davies). In 1791 the works were purchased by Sir Benjamin Hammet who set about creating an estate which overlooked the works and was centred upon a house surrounding which were gardens and pleasure grounds . By the time of Fenton's visit to Castell Malgwyn in 1810 the works had been 'taken down'; however in the short time that it operated they were noted as being one of the largest in the 'Kingdom', second only to the works at MelinGriffith in Glamorgan.

The main reason for establishing the works here appears to have been due to the plentiful supply of charcoal. Another crucial factor would also have been the River Teifi which was used to both power the works and to transport products to and from the major seaport at Cardigan at the mouth of the river.

Very little survives of the Castell Malgwyn works, the complex has been comprehensively demolished with the site landscaped and in-part, built over. The core of the complex was situated adjacent to the River Teifi to the west of Castell Malgwyn House , now a hotel. It covered an area roughly 150m north-south by 40m east west, with a 4m high slab- built retaining wall and near vertical rock face defining much of the eastern boundary of the complex.

RCAHMW carried out a detailed survey and interpretation of the tinplate works in March 2006 and has written a report documenting its history and detailing all surviving structures as well as surmising the likely layout of the works.

Louise Barker, RCAHMW, 11 July 2006

Castell Malgwyn Garden;

This is an intricate and highly picturesque landscape dating mainly to about 1795-1811. Some work was carried out on the grounds by one of the few Welsh professional landscapers of the period, Charles Price of Llechryd. Its setting is one of extreme beauty and picturesque quality, with the contrasting valleys of the Teifi and Morgenau included in the grounds. The walks laid out in these valleys are a rare survival and can be compared with Piercefield, and Hafod. This site has other landscaping features of interest, including the remains of a detached ornamental garden with a large fountain. There is a D-shaped walled kitchen garden. CSB

It is noteworthy that the riverside paths are still in use. Only the footbridge marked on the First Edition 25 inch plan of 1888 was lost between then and 1906. C.S.Briggs 17.10.2005 RCAHMW

After feasting on this charming view, I cross a small one arched bridge over a brook, abounding with trout, that takes its rise about three miles to the eastward, and here discharges itself into the sea, separating Cemaes from Pedidiawg, and my eye involuntarily turning to the left insinuates itself through a small valley, in my memory richly wooded, with meloncholy pleasure to the old mansion of Manarnawan, once the residence of my great grandfather, John Lewis esq.. Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis

MANERowen, or MANERAWEN (MAENOR-Owain), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Fishguard; containing 194 inhabitants. This parish, which is of very limited extent, is situated in the northern part of the county. It is intersected by the road leading from Fishguard to St Davids, and watered by a rivulet that runs into Fishguard bay. The lands, with the exception of a small common, are in a good state of cultivation; and the soil, which is peculiarly favourable to the growth of barley, is in general fertile and productive: the surface is varied; and the surrounding scenery, though not distinguished by any striking features, is of a pleasing character. The ancient seat and residence of John Lewis, esq., a magistrate of the county in the reign of James II., and equally distinguished for his learning and impartial administration of the law, is now deserted and in ruins: the estate is the property of his descendant, Richard Bowen , esq., who has erected a handsome mansion a little higher up the Hill, which forms an interesting object in the scenery of the place. John Lewis, esq., was the intimate friend of Bishop Gibson, whom he materially assisted in editing Camden's "Britannia," more especially those parts of it that related to the principality, of which he was a native, and in the history and antiquities of which he was profoundly skilled. Slate of very good quality has been found in the parish, but the working of it has been discontinued: a small carding-mill, still in operation, affords employment to a few of the inhabitants. The living is a vicarage not in charge, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; present net income, £86; patrons and appropriators, the Subchanter and Vicars- choral of St Davids, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £80. The Church, dedicated to St. Mary , is not remarkable for its architecture.

Brwynant Stones

On the first and second fields north east of Brwynant farm house, and known respectively as Tir Carreg ucha and Parc tir Carreg issa, are two erect stones which have every appearance of being ancient monuments. They have a height above ground of 57in and 63in, are of irregular form and have slightly irregular tops. They have no local names or tradition – visited 19th May 1921

Penmeiddyn Alignment

On a narrow strip of waterlogged Moor 500yds south of Penmeiddyn farmhouse are the remains of what appears to have been an alignment of stones having a N.E.-S.W. direction. The line begins with four erect stones on the open bog at its south western end; all stand about 3ft above the bog and are slightly pointed. The intervals are from no1 to 2, 36ft ;no2 to 3, 30ft; No 3 to 4, 18ft. At a distance of 40ft from No 4 starts a row of some 50 stones , which are placed in direct contact with each other. This line continues a north easterly course for 135ft. The stones are all low; of most of them only the heads appear above the surface, whilst a few have a height of 12 to 18 in. In places they seem to run in a closely parallel double line; in others they stand in a single file, in which case the companion stones may have sunk into the morass. The alignment is on the boundary line between the parishes of Maenorowen and St Nicholas. The only reference to this monument appears to be in Pem. Arch. Survey, which has the entry “Penmeiddyn Standing Stones. Four upright stones standing in a line 3ft above the ground. They call to mind the lower galleries' in Brittany, but they may have been placed in position in modern times”. The stones are probably intended to Mark the boundary between the two aforementioned parishes, or between two manorial Properties – visited 19th May 1921.

Maenorowen Hill

A low and roughly circular Hill, 360ft above Ord Datum, in the west of the parish. It is known as 'tump' and the field immediately north east as 'Parc y Dymyn' . Both names are apparently derived from the natural form of the Hill rather than from any artificial mound upon it, of which there is no appearance. --visited 19th May 1921.

Castell

This mound castle stands on a field known as Parc Castell appurtenant to the farm of Castell Fartin, in the parish of Fishguard North. It has the present height of 10-12 ft; the summit has been considerably disturbed by the growth of trees. The surrounding ditch is fairly perfect towards the east, where it has a breadth of 10ft and a depth of 4ft. There is no trace of a Bailey court. Until the site was cleared of its timber during the war the mound was hidden in “Old Castle Plantation” and had thus escaped notice –visited 31st May 1921.

The parish Church of Martletwy may be a pre-conquest ecclesiastical foundation. The grant included a large portion of land in the north of the parish.

The south part of the manor comprised one knight's fee in 1362 when it was held of the barony.

Possible working --Exact location unknown; lease of lead and copper granted along with coal at Ewton in 1798, probably only latter worked.

Coal pit Moor & Black wells

Extensive area of crop- & soil-Mark features indicative of old coal mining activity, supported by given placenames.

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Coal and culm are worked to a great extent upon the estate of Sir John Owen, Bart.; and the produce of the collieries, which employ more than 100 persons, is shipped for the supply of distant parts, from a place called Land-shipping, on the Eastern Cleddy, where an excellent Quay has been constructed for the purpose.

The area partly lies in the Pembrokeshire coalfield and waterborne activity increased with the rise of the local mining industry. Mining began in the late medieval period, but was a low-key affair and probably only worked on a seasonal basis by farmers and farm labourers up to the end of the 18th century. along the shore where the remains of Quays and industrial buildings at Landshipping Ferry and Landshipping Quay testify to the former importance of these locations for the export of coal.

Martletwy Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839

Martletwy, a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, in South Wales, 6 miles (S.E.) from Haverfordwest; containing 846 inhabitants. This place is situated on the Eastern Cleddy, at its junction with the western Cleddy, and at the termination of the noble harbour of Milford which is formed by the union of those two rivers. Martletwy is bounded on the north and west by the Eastern Cleddy river, east by the parishes of Mynwere and Yerbeston, and south by those of Coedcanlais and Lawrenny; and contains about 2580 acres, of which 635 are arable, 1905 pasture, and 40 woodland, the prevailing timber being oak. The surface has rather a barren appearance, and the soil is cold and wet, and for the most part poor; the chief agricultural produce consists of oats, barley, and potatoes. Here was the ancient seat of the Owens, who by marriage became proprietors of the noble estates originally belonging to the family of Wyrriot. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £4, endowed with £200 royal bounty and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Hon. Capt. Greville, who is also owner of the great tithes: the tithes have been commuted for £180, of which £100 are payable to the impropriator, and £80 to the vicar, who has also a glebe of four acres, valued at £5 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Marcellus, is a plain old edifice, containing between 700 and 800 sittings, more than half free. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Calvinistic Methodists, in each of which a Sunday school is also held.

The Church consists of a chancel 17 ½ ft by 16ft, nave 46ft by 13 ½ ft, single Bell cote above the west gable and south porch. On the south side of the chancel is a blocked up low side window outside 18in by 5in, splayed out on the interior to 36in by 52in beneath it is a stone seat 20 in high. The chancel arch is roundheaded with plain imposts. The arcade consists of three bays, one of which connects with the chancel and the others are in the nave. At the east end is a square recess or aumbry. The timbering Throughout is modern. The font bowl has no distinctive feature, but is probably late Norman. Under the modern communion table is placed the original black marble altar slab 44 in by 18in. During the last restoration a fragment of a coffin lid bearing in high relief the upper part of a figure of a tonsured priest with head resting on a cushion, was found blocking up the lower side window. The hands are raised in benediction. The inscription reads + Sir PHILIPRE(s) I DVO DESEMO DIE S... in very faint letters of the early 15th century. The slab is now affixed to the west wall of the chancel

The Church was appropriated to the Hospitallers Church of Slebech.

The Church of Martletwy

Mediaeval although heavily restored, but also retains an interesting early font and a fine early monumental effigy. It is first mentioned in 1231, in a confirmation of the grant to the Knights Hospitallers of Slebech by John, son of Raymond by Bishop Anselm. The first recorded Vicar of Martletwy was Peter Filiol in 1317.

During the 1840s it appears the roof was renewed. In the 1850s interior repairs were carried out and the seating improved. Work on the chancel was carried out in 1879, during which the tomb effigy of Sir Philip, an early fifteenth century priest, was discovered.

The main restoration of the Church, was completed in 1894 in the time of the Rev. F. O. Thomas . The work was to the designs of the architect Ernest V Collier of Carmarthen, at a cost of £805 toward which the ICBS granted £25. The windows were entirely restored and the roofs, floor and interior surfaces renewed to an extent which has left almost no historic detail intact.

The masonry is local uncoursed sandstone rubble throughout, flush or ribbon pointed. The walls are not battered except for a small part at the NW corner of the nave. The roof is slate with red ridge tiles, coped gables to all parts except the porch, and carved crosses at all apexes. The doors and most of the windows are the work of the late nineteenth century restoration. Both the porch inner door and the door to the vestry have pointed arches. The windows of the nineteenth century restoration generally are pairs of lights with a top quatrefoil, in plate tracery. The restored bellcote for a single Bell at the west end of the aisle is in similar masonry, but the arch over the Bell is in brickwork.

Non Conformist Chapels

Martletwy Baptist Chapel was built in 1828, rebuilt in 1864 and again in 1880. The present Chapel, dated 1880, is built in the Vernacular style with a long-wall entry plan and small pane flat-headed windows.

The former Calvinistic Methodist Chapel of Burnetts Hill was built in 1812 and opened in January 1813 by the Rev. Theophilus Jones. The Chapel was rebuilt in 1862 and renovated in 1890. The present Chapel, dated 1862, was built in the Vernacular style of the gable-entry type and served the local mining community. The Chapel originally had a level floor and a gallery, and its north entrance (probably with double doors) was at the present position of the left window facing the road. There is a later vestry or schoolroom at the east end and a later hip-roofed porch at the west end. In 2008 this Chapel underwent sensitive restoration and is now Grade 2 Listed, for its early character and unusual interior layout.

Village School

On the 8th of January I visited this school. It was held in a small room, a greater part of which was taken up by a bed and a large coffer. There were only three children present at the time of my visit. One read the Testament with ease; another was reading in the spelling book; the third was learning monosyllables. The master had been a Mason but from ill health was obliged to give up his trade and (to procure a livelihood) take to school teaching. He and his wife receive 4s a week relief from the parish. The children were exceedingly ignorant and could not answer the simplest question.

RCAM Parish of Marteltwy Upper Castle

On a field called Upper Castle some 300 yards north west of the Parish Church are two low circular mounds. That to the south has a circumference of 120ft and a height of 4 ft; it does not appear have been disturbed. The second about 25yds to the north is 150fy in circumference and about 2ft high. It has been slightly dug into from the summit. Both are grass covered and are probably sepulchral. visited 2nd July 1920

Iron age settlement. An early Christian site and an important medieval village. Old 7-9c ring cross slabs in churchyard wall and an Ogham stone in Church porch.

Fenton Tours 1811

Hence ,proceeded to Marthry or Merthyr, the Church of the Martyrs [in a letter from H Goff , dated St Davids Dec 2 1720 to Brown Willis, he says “At Mathry the corpses of the martyrs have been interred in coffins of stone, to be seen in several places near the Church-yard”,] One of the numerous benefices engrossed by Giraldus; the village and the great tithes of this immense parish are the valuable endowment of the golden prebend of St Davids and are now held by Sir Hugh Owen, under a lease from that predendary. The village crowning the summit of a very high Hill of gradual ascent, and well cultivated, most likely was larger than it now appears, as there was a patent obtained, Temp. Edward III for a Market and Fair there. The Market has been abolished, but the Fair is still continued on Michaelmas day, at which all the servants of the country are hired. The Church was formerly dignified by a steeple serving for a landmark to mariners, from its situation on this conspicuous eminence, an exposure that proved the means of its destruction, it being blown down in a storm.

[Slate Quarries 1839]

Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis

Mathrey (Merthyr), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 8 miles (S. W. by W.) from Fishguard; containing 1012 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in the north-western part of the county, is bounded on the north by St. George's Channel, and intersected by the turnpike road leading from Fishguard to St Davids. In the northern part, bordering on the coast, which is for the most part bold and abrupt, the depth of water varying from seven to fourteen fathoms. Near the shore, are some considerable slate-quarries, affording employment to a portion of the population. The village, which is situated on the summit of a Hill, was anciently a place of more importance than it is at present, and had a weekly Market and an annual Fair, granted by letters patent in the reign of Edward III.; the former has been long since discontinued, but the latter is still held on October 10th, and is numerously attended by the inhabitants of the surrounding district, for the purpose of hiring servants. Another Fair takes place on November 22nd at Nevin, a village on the coast.

The living is a discharged vicarage, united, with that of St. Nicholas, to the discharged vicarage of Granston; it is rated in the King's Books at £4. 7. 6., and endowed with £200 royal bounty: the rectory is rated in the books at £25. 14. 4½. The vicarial tithes of Mathrey have been commuted for £190, and the rectorial for £323. 3.; the vicarial glebe comprises ninety acres, valued at £50 per annum. The Church, dedicated to the Holy Martyrs, and situated in the middle of the village, is an ancient structure, but not distinguished by any architectural details of importance. There is a place of worship for Independents, in which a Sunday school is also held. Tithes of the annual value of £4. 15. are stated to have been given by an unknown donor, for decayed farmers' widows of the parish; but nothing is now known of this charity. A perfect cromlech, consisting of a table stone seventeen feet in length, apparently resting upon six upright columns, but in fact only supported by four, is still preserved at long House, in the village of Trêvin, or Trêvdyn, a manor belonging to the Bishop of St Davids, where was once an episcopal palace, said to have been erected by Bishop Martin, to which long House was the Grange. There is another cromlech at Glandwr. The ancient mansion of the Harries family, of Priskilly Forest, is now the property and residence of John Hill Harries, esq. The whole coast exhibits vestiges of earthworks, evidently thrown up by the early piratical invaders who infested this part of the principality. Mr. Edward Llwyd communicated to the Royal Society of London an interesting account of an extraordinary swarm of locusts that visited this place in 1693, and of which the particulars are fully detailed in the second volume of the Philosophical Transactions.

South Wales - H. L. V. Fletcher 1956.

Mathry - There is a story that it was here that St Teilo rescued seven children "born at a birth" whom their father was going to throw in the river as he was unable to support them as he already had a large family. All seven, if the legend is true, became saints.

The village is perched on a Hill summit, enjoying wide views over the north coast and Pen Caer. The Church (on a prehistoric circular site) is very unusual - massive and squat. A good centre for holidaymakers, with a wood-turners's workshop, an antique shop, and farmhouse teas.

The Pembrokeshire Coast National Park by Dillwyn Miles.

A Hill top village with wide views over the surrounding countryside. Its circular churchyard may well have taken its shape from a pre-historic site. The Church is dedicated to the Seven Saints, septuplets saved from being drowned by their impecunious father when St Teilo came upon scene and baptised them instead. An inscribed stone in the Church porch commemorates Maccudicl the son of Caticus, who lived in the 6thC and there are two stones inscribed with crosses in the churchyard walls.

1925 RCAM & RCAHMW: Mathry - Church of the Holy Martyrs

`The present Church was erected in 1869 and restored in 1902. Though built upon ancient foundations, it does not seem to have incorporated any of the features of its predecessor. Fenton (Tour, p. 29) says that the Church of his day was `formerly dignified with a steeple, serving for a landmark to mariners, from its situation on this conspicuous eminence, an exposure that proved the means of its destruction, it being thrown down in a storm'. The table in the vestry has a highly polished marble 52in by 30in which is said to be the altar slab of the earlier structure

Incised Stones

Two early cross-inscribed stones have been moved to the churchyard from elsewhere in the parish. The first, originally from Rhoslanog, has a double ring, cf. the double circle on the back of the inscribed stone from this site. The site is also associated with the legend of the `seven sainted men of Mathry' to whom the Church is dedicated.

Grade II listed building

Situated in centre of hilltop village, within rectangular burial ground.

Exterior: 1865-8 Anglican parish Church by R K Penson, in grey snecked rubble stone with grey stone dressings. Slate roofs and crested ridge tiles. Early English style. Nave, S aisle with SW porch tower (incomplete), transeptal gable, and chancel with canted apse and N vestry. Simple lancets without mouldings, three to W front and to S transept gable, otherwise single. Nave gables are coped with cross finials, and NW angle is buttressed from N, while SW tower has single lancet to W, two-step buttresses to NW and SW, the SW buttress set diagonally, and SE octagonal stair tower with S buttress. Pointed arched S door. An overhanging slate pyramid roof caps SW tower that was intended to rise higher (to a recessed Bell-stage under a tall broached slate spire). S aisle has single lancet to right of transept gable, which has modern coping, replacing original eaves. Chancel has lancets over moulded sill band, no buttresses, and N vestry with fine battered square chimney. Pointed vestry door.

Interior:

whitewashed with three-bay nave roof, originally open, boarded in 1905; two-bay S arcade with round pillars and two-chamfer pointed arches. Chancel arch on corbelled short half-columns. Panelled chancel roof with plaster between raised ribs. Roll moulded sill-band around and splayed rear arches to chancel windows. Octagonal C19 font on foiled pier. No original pews or pulpit but original sanctuary rails, timber with iron inserts. One stained glass window of c1921 signed ?H G Hiller. In Church porch is early Christian lettered memorial stone.

Reference: Lambeth Palace ICBS Records 6416.

Church was designed by Penson & Ritchie in C14 Transitional style, the S aisle to have Organ chamber under gable, and a lithograph was published showing the proposed spire. The Church was opened in 1868.

National Library of Wales: St David's Records contains 1903 faculty for matchboarding the nave roof, E V Collier architect, and 1921 faculty for stained glass.

2015 North Dewisland Benefice Mathry - Church of the Holy Martyrs

Set on a Hill commanding panoramic views of North Pembrokeshire, Mathry has claims to be one of the oldest settlements in Pembrokeshire. The Church of the Holy Martyrs is located in the centre of the village and the present building of 1869 was intended to have a spire, but funds ran out, leaving it with an interesting shape. The interior is spacious and light, with wooden chairs.

A stone inscribed with a wheel cross is now one of two built in to the west wall of the churchyard, to the right of the gate as you face it. They are from 9th century. A stone in the Church porch belongs to an earlier period, probably 5th or 6th century. The inscription is cut in Ogham script and reads: 'Mac Cudicel son of Caticus lies here'. The 'Mac' is now missing. Near the altar lies another carved stone - the cross is carved in relief and the letters alpha and omega are inscribed above the arms, and beneath them the letters IHC.

The derivation of the name Mathry and the dedication of the Church are not entirely clear, but a lovely account from the 12th century Book of Llandaff describes how St Teilo, walking beside the river Taf at Llanddowror rescued seven baby boys, whose father was too poor to provide for them. The saint baptised them and every day they received fish to eat from the river. Eventually they were sent to Mathry where for the rest of their lives they were known as the seven saints. In the 17th and 18th centuries a number of cist burials were discovered near the churchyard and these were instantly called the coffins of the martyrs.

Mathry was an important benefice of the diocese in medieval times, granted a Market and hiring Fair by King Edward III.

Temporary Church Closure

Unfortunately, Mathry Church is now temporarily closed due to the dangerous state of the ceiling, until the necessary repair work is undertaken. It probably will not be in use again until Summer 2015.

On 27 July, 1564, a lease of the parsonage and prebend of Mathry with a cursal prebend was granted by Thomas Barlow, Parson and prebendary of Mathry, to John Barlow of Slebech, esq., for 21 years, at a rent of £24, the lessee to allow the vicar of Mathry to 'occupy one draught of toothe' within his said parish, commonly called 'Danndre', which draught Sir William Davie late had as an augmentation for his living; or to pay the vicar 40s. at the election of the vicar, the lessee also to pay yearly, during the said term, 20s. towards the stipend of 'a schoolmaster to be kept in St Davids.'

On 6 Nov., 1567, a new lease was granted to the same lessee for 40 years, on the same terms; presumably on a surrender of the previous lease.

On 27 Nov., 1903, a faculty was granted, confirming the work of match-boarding the roof of

Mathry (The Holy Martyrs).' — Here is a remarkable little Chalice of the time of Charles II. It measures 5 in. in height, the bowl being a simple beaker 4 inches deep and resting on a low trumpet-shaped stem and base. Underneath the bowl is a simple band of cable moulding. The diam. of the mouth is 3 in. ; weight, 6 oz. 10dwts. The date letter indicates the year 1671 with maker's Mark R P above a mullet or fleur-de-lys. Close up to the lip of the bowl is a stippled inscription which is almost illegible

" Poculum ecclesie de Mathrey [?] Hergest • Churchwarden ". Beneath the foot is engraved twice the date " 1684 ".

A Paten or Salver, 9 in. in diameter, with shaped and moulded rim, resting on three feet; weight, 14oz. For some inexplicable reason the date letter on this piece has been deliberately defaced but the maker's Mark, the lion passant and leopard's head crowned, still remain. The maker's Mark which was entered at Goldsmiths Hall in 1748 is in a fourlobed stamp for Ellas Cachart. The piece carries the following inscription " The Gift of Anne Tucker of Sealyham To the Parish Church of Mathry 1765 ".

There is also an ewer-shaped Flagon, weighing 1702.; Hall Mark 1898 ; maker's Mark jf in a plain shield. The lid is surmounted by a Latin cross ; inscription " Presented to the Church of the Holy Martyrs Mathry [engraver's error] by James Davies Penyfeidir 1899 ".

Rehoboth Day School

On the 19th of January I visited the above school. It was held in the Independent Chapel. The children had not been in attendance for the last 5 weeks on account of the severe weather. There was no school furniture in the Chapel. The master told me that the boys were in the habit of writing on the seats of the pews. The master who was also the minister of Rehoboth Independent Chapel, was far from being conversant with the English Language David Lewis Assistant

Ty Newydd grug Tumulus

On a field belonging to Ty newydd grug farm are the remains of a tumulus, and close by is a standing stone which probably had some connection with it. The mound was opened about the year 1890 by a former tenant of Ty newydd grug who used the stones "from the middle" in the erection of the present farm buildings. His daughter, the present tenant, remembers seeing "two pots" which were found in the mound; A large one with stripes round it, and a small one; both were broken up" When perfect the tumulus had a base circumference of about 90ft. At a distance of 30yds due south of this mound is an erect maenhir which gives the name of Parc y garreg to the field. This imposing looking stone rises to a height of 8ft 9in from the level visited 17th May 1921.

Carreg Samson or Long House Cromlech

A well known cromlech standing on a field called Parc maen Llwyd at the head of cwm RAdau, a little inlet on the south side of Aber Castell creek, and about 500yds south west of Ynys y Castell on which is the mound known as "Samsons Finger". The irregular shaped structure consists of a chamber and capstone, the latter 15ft by 9ft and a thickness which varies from 2 ½ ft to 5 ½ ft. Of the six stones which form the chamber only three bear the weight of the capstone. These supports are from 4 ½ ft to 6ft high. Although much disturbed, it is possible to trace in the stones lying about many that contributed to form the mound, while others, some in situ would appear to have been used in the foundations. The packing stones which have converted the cromlech into a shelter for sheep have been placed in position since 1901, in which year our Inspecting Officer first visited it.

RCAM

Unnoticed by any previous writer, and not marked on the 6in Ord Sheet, is an erect maenhir about 150yds west of the cromlech, which may have been a pointer stone. This has a height of 5 ½ ft above the soil; its top is somewhat pointed.

The earliest extant photograph of the cromlech is probably one taken about the year 1868, now in the collection of the Carmarthen Antiquarian Society. This shows that it was then carefully protected by a well made wooden fence. -visited 30th April 1920.

Glandwr Cromlech.

The remains of this cromlech stands in a field 200yds east of Glandwr Farm, nearly a mile west of the village of Mathry. The chamber is formed of four stones; those on the east and west sides have a length of 9ft and a height of 3ft respectively; that on the north is 4ft high and its fellow on the south is 3ft above the surface. The capstone has disappeared. The grave lies due north and south – visited 30th April 1920.

Cromlech at Pen lan Mabws ucha

About 600yds east of the farmhouse of Pen Lan mabws ucha, adjoining a field known locally as Y gromlech is a single monolith, 50 in high and 70in wide, being all that remains of the “Cromlech” so marked on the 6in Ord Sheet- which tradition asserts to have stood here. The field has Long been under cultivation doubtless accounting for the absence of all traces of foundations of the mound. The Pem Arch Survey notes the monument as the remains of a cromlech. A few stones and the tradition, is all that remains. – visited 17th May 1921.

Tre Walter Llwyd Cromlech

About 300yds north east of the farmhouse of Tre Walter Llwyd in a field known as Parc y Garn and close to its northern hedge which has been carried over a portion of the site , is a ruined cromlech which, when perfect, must have been a fine monument. The capstone measures 11ft by 10ft, and had a thickness of 3ft.; a part of it has apparently been broken off. The uprights have fallen are under the capstone. In Arch Camb for 1872 p 139 this monument is described as “the remains of a large chamber ,consisting of a capstone, 13ft Long by 8ft broad, resting on one low supporter, the whole partially buried in a hedge. This apparently is the one mentioned by Fenton.. He speaks also of a cistvaen at one end, which had lost one side and its cover” – visited 30th April 1920.

Castell Coch Pen Morfa

On Pen Morfa peninsula in the extreme north of the parish are the remains of an earthwork consisting of a broken bank from 6ft to 8ft high and about 50ft in length drawn across a tiny isthmus. The entrance which was at the west end of the bank, has been destroyed by landslides –visited 12 May 1920 (caution should be exercised in visiting this remote spot)

Castell llain Madws

In the south east of the parish, on a hillock in a field known as Parc yr hen gastell, about 400 yds east of the farmhouse of mabws fawr, are the scanty remains of a circular earthwork. The defence consisted of a single enclosing bank, best seen to the south, where it rises about 3ft from the ground, to fall about 4ft to a ditch, now practically levelled by cultivation. The diameter of the enclosed area is about 100ft. The entrance is to the east. The 6in Ord Surv. Sheet shows this work as oval in form but so far as the remains are now discernible, the shape is distinctly circular. The Pem Arch Survey notes this as the “Remains of a so called Castell; probably a cattle enclosure:” the name yr hen gastell, “the old Castel” however denotes a military rather than an Agricultural purpose – visited 17th May 1921.

Castell Ty newydd grug

On the second field east of the farmhouse of Ty newydd grug and overlooking the western Cleddau (at this point the boundary between the parishes of Mathry and Llanymchaer) is an hitherto unnoticed earthwork. Its discovery is due to the preservation of the name of Parc Castell in the Tithe Schedule . Running from north east to south west is a roughly curved earthen bank, both ends of which terminate at the end of the slope to the river. The enclosed area has a depth of 140ft and a width of 60ft. The bank rises to a height of 3ft and at its northern end falls 5ft to the exterior level. Cultivation has obliterated any ditch; the bank itself is much overgrown in several places, and in others is destroyed, the interior of the enclosure having long been under cultivation. The entrance was probably at the south western end of the rampart.--visited 17th May 1921.

Castell Pen u feidr.

On the field of Parc Castell some 300yds east of the farmhouse of pen y feidre, is the outline of an earthwork of which only the faint trace of a bank to the northwest remains. visited 17th May 1921.

Castell Rhedyn

The farmhouse of Castell Rhedyn, about one mile south west of Mathry village, derives its name from an earthwork which stood on the third field south of the house , and is still known as Castell Rhedyn. Nothing is marked on the 6in sheet which would suggest a earthwork on this field but close observation of its ploughed surface reveals traces of a possible circular enclosure, there being at that spot indicated more stones than on any other part of the field. The field next west is known as parc Castell – visited 17th May 1921.

Carnachen-Wen, Mathry,

A two-storey, stone-built farmhouse which appears to have been a 16th century, 3-unit house, consisting of a kitchen at the lower end with large fireplace (as existing), Hall and then parlour at the upper end. There is evidence for a cross-passage, on the line of the present stair in the kitchen. There is a porch to south. The Hall may once have had a lateral chimney . It was probably rebuilt in the 18th century, perhaps when the 1776 wing was added at the upper end. At this time the fireplace opening in the wall backing on to the cross-passage could have been inserted. The fireplace has since been blocked and the stack removed.

Within the house, two trusses of oak appear to have been re-used and of medieval origin.

There are a number of small traditional farm building, some with mid-18th century datestones, and the remains of an 17/18th century garden with gazebo, raised-walk, ponds and a dingle with stream.

Carreg Samson Burial Chamber

A burial chamber consisting of a capstone, 4.7m by 2.7m and 1.0m thick, resting on 3 of 6 stones,

1.1m-2.2m high, defining a chamber. Excavation in 1968, revealed four additional stone-holes, one having supported a further chamber stone, the others indicating a possible passage leading off to the NW. Scant traces of a covering cairn were found to the S and it was shown that the monument had been raised over an amorphous pit, at least 5.25m by 8.0m and 0.8m deep, filled with clay and stones. Finds included a small quantity of burnt bone, probably human, Pottery and flints, the last of which may have been residual or curated. J.Wiles 14.05.2002

a quiet and self-contained village; nowadays alive with visitors during the summer months en route for Marloes sands and Skomer Island. There are some pretty cottages in the village, but the main features of interest are the strange clock tower and the little Church.

Marloes sands are magnificent, although no vehicle can approach the beach. Musselwick Sands also somewhat difficult of access, are becoming popular nowadays. Martin's Haven, which has only a stony beach, is the departure point for the Skomer Island boats.

Strange clock tower.

Marloes sands has fascinating rock formations, some fossils can be found.

Albion Sands named after a Paddle steamer (first in the area) which foundered on her maiden voyage in c1840 part still visible.]

Acc/to The Pembrokeshire Coast National Park by Dillwyn Miles

The most westerly village in South Pembrokeshire. Has a clock-tower built in 1904 in memory of the 4th Lord Kensington, and a double Bell-cote Church which has a Norman font and a baptistry sunk in the floor.

Marloes Mere was once famous for its leeches which were much in demand in Harley Street.

In the past the local smugglers the "Marloes Gulls" were notorious and formed one of the main occupations of the area but until the draining of the marshes a local industry (other than smuggling) was the gathering of leeches used by the Doctors of the time for blood letting.

An early 18c a Haverfordwest doctor records that the people of Marloes had used a primitive form of inoculation against smallpox for longer than anyone could remember.

Acc/to South Pembrokeshire Place Names - P Valentine Harris.

Marloes . Although the Tax. Eccl. spells it Malros; this may be an error, for Owen gives Marlasse and Speed's map Marlas. Marl was once dug here.

Philbeach [Filbatch]. (Farm-house near Marloes). Here stood the home of Will ffibatch, who married Sarah, daughter of Robert de Valle , owner of Dale, and chief bard to Sir Rhys ap Thomas , in 1485.

1811 Fenton Marlos

After experiencing the most hospitable reception from my friend, and a night of such refreshments as the antiquarian traveller can but seldom command, with an able Cicerone in my host I set out, and first touch at Marlos, a long straggling, poor looking village, still poorer in appearance on account of the cottages being all ill thatched with straw; yet in this place I presume once resided Sir William de Marlos, in great military state among his retainers; a noble foreigner, who makes a great figure in our pedigrees, though no remains of an ancient Castle or castellated mansion exists to fortify the presumption unless it might have occupied the site of some of the more modern mansions in the neighbourhood.

In the village there is a small Church of too unimposing character to tempt me to enter it, especially as I understood from my companion that it contained nothing worthy remark, that its inside corresponded with its exterior. The living is a vicarage of small value, the rectorial tithes belong to my friend Mr Laugharne as lay impropriator, but the manor is Lord Kensington's in right of his late purchase of Pearson, though Mr Laugharne contends to have a mean Lord-ship in the single tenement of Little Marlos only, where he claims a jurisdiction exclusive of the Lord paramount.

The inhabitants of this village live chiefly by fishing, catching lobsters and crabs, and drive a considerable trade in leeches, with which Marlos mere, a little farther on to the west of the village abounds. This is common nearly all overflown in Winter, but having in summer the greater part dry for pasture, and in a very dry season nearly the whole, about sixty or seventy acres, affording support during the hot months to the cattle of the villagers, who with their desires bounded by habit, have all the little comforts of life within themselves, each his cow and his garden. Nothing can be more primitive than their manners for the seldom go far from home or vary their mode of life. They are industrious like their original ancestry the Flemings, and spin a great deal of coarse hemp for nets of every kind, and make lobster pots, not only for their own use but for sale.

Marloes Day School

I visited this school on the 14th January.

The village is a most wretched one; the road through it is broken and uneven, the houses are generally straggling and dilapidated, often partially unthatched; several are wholly in ruins and deserted. The great tithes have been purchased by three proprietors who cannot agree about repairing the chancel, which is much decayed. The people are said to be very ill-conditioned, not averse to wrecking, and spiteful when crossed or thwarted. There are several fishermen among them, though the place is not immediately on the sea.

The day school (which used to be held in private homes) is now held in an old Independent Chapel no longer used for religious purposes and rented by the master. There was a raised hearth of brick in the room with a grate on top but no chimney. There was a fire of culm burning on it; the heat and vapour made the room almost insufferable to one coming from fresh air. In one corner was a heap of culm, in another a bench or two piled against the wall and various litter; at the bottom of the room lay a gravestone on which the master had been chalking the letters which the village Mason was to cut as an inscription; on the table lay a jug and a pipe.

The master had a good address and seemed a superior man.

The school was hardly reunited after the interruption of Christmas. The master expected 40 or 50 scholars if his old pupils returned and Mrs Bevan's school just opened at Dale did not interfere with him. They were mostly farmers' children; they ciphered in the proportion of a day and a half to half a day for reading, writing and spelling. The children came to school too irregularly to admit of its being opened with a hymn or prayer. No reason was given why it could not be so closed. The endowment was not very regularly paid; some change had taken place in the investment, and this had led to difficulty. I heard 17 read St Mark; 15 read with ease. The writing was very good. Mental arithmetic questions answered without the use of slates and two complicated arithmetic problems were correctly answered on slates (£275 19s 4 ¾ d X 35 and The interest of £600 at 3% for nine months. (£ 9658 18s 10 1/4d & £13 10s)

The rate of terms must put the school beyond the reach of labouring men's children. The Master is a Dissenter; all scholars however in the school, private no free school

1849 Marlais Marloes) Topographical Dictionary of Wales

MARLAIS (MARLOES), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 11 miles (west South west.) from Haverfordwest; containing 486 inhabitants. This place is situated on the southern shore of Muggleswick bay, a portion of St. Bride's Bay; the western extremity of it forms a little promontory, and on the east the parish is partly bounded by a pill, or creek, of Milford Haven. It comprises a considerable tract of arable and pasture land, which, with the exception of a comparatively small portion, is inclosed and in a good state of cultivation. The village is principally inhabited by fishermen, who obtain a livelihood in the lobster and crab fisheries that are carried on here, and by the sale of leeches, which are found in great numbers in a sheet of water covering from sixty to seventy acres, called Marlais Mere, which, during the summer months, when it is dry, affords excellent pasturage for cattle. More than one-half of the parish is encompassed by the sea, and the shore is in general bold and bordered with cliffs; the depth of water, within a short distance, varies from four to fourteen fathoms. There are a few unimportant islands, among which are Midland and Gateholm, situated close to the coast; the larger one of Skomer is attached to St. Martin's parish, Pembroke. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £5, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor; present net income, £80. The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a small edifice, not possessing any architectural details of importance. A former structure in honour of St. Mary, situated near the beach, was destroyed by an encroachment of the sea, that also laid waste the glebe land originally belonging to the living. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans, with a Sunday school held in it; and a Church day school here is endowed with £5 per annum, bequeathed by Margaret Allen, of the parish, in 1772.

1895 Marloes --Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire Timmins

A glance at the map suggests a short detour to obtain a peep at Marloes. The sandy lane, meandering beside a streamlet, lands us right abreast of the Church at the entrance to the village. The little edifice makes a pleasant picture, with a handful of low thatched cottages grouped around. Inside we find the small pointed chancel arch with projecting wings, characteristic of the churches in this locality.

There are some curious features here, notably an old bronze sanctus Bell, and a modern baptistery sunk in a corner of the floor, to meet the predilections of the Welsh churchman, who does not apparently consider the ceremony of baptism complete unless he can 'goo throw the watter.' Dwelling apart from the busier haunts of men, the good folk of this remote parish have kept pretty much to themselves, and have acquired the reputation of being a simple-minded, superstitious race — 'Marloes gulls,' as the saying is. In order to save the Long Saturday's tramp to Haverford Market, a Marloes man hit upon the ingenious device of walking half the distance on Friday, then returning home he would complete the rest of the walk the next day !

In the 'good old times,' if tales be true, these Marloes people were notorious wreckers. On dark tempestuous nights they would hitch a lanthorn to a horse's tail, and drive the animal around the seaward cliffs ; then woe betide the hapless mariner who should set his course by this Fata Morgana ! There is a story of the Parson who, when the news of a wreck got abroad in Church one Sunday morning, broke off his discourse and exclaimed, 'Wait a moment, my brethren, and give your pastor a fair start !'

Another mile of crooked, crankling lanes takes us to the brow of the sea cliffs, whence we obtain a Bird's-eye panorama of the broad sweep of Marloes sands. Ruddy sandstone rocks pitched at a steep angle encompass the bay, and peep grimly out from beneath the smooth, firm sands. Gateholm rises close in shore, an island at low tide only ; the broad mass of Skokholm stretches out to sea, while the horizon line is broken by the lonely islet of Grassholm, a favourite haunt of sea birds, and scene of a notorious ' massacre of the innocents ' by a party of yachts men, some few years ago.

The frequent recurrence of these holms and other place-names of Scandinavian origin, points unmistakeably to the presence of those old sea rovers around the Pembrokeshire coast, in the days of ' auld langsyne.'

The little Church of St Peter's stands on a mound. The 13c chancel slightly skewed. There is a Norman font. It was renovated 1874. Baptistery for total immersion built.

1856 16 September Glynne, Welsh Churches Arch Camb 1886

This Church in general arrangements is not unlike St Ismael's but has not had the same advantages of repair and improvement. The plan comprehends a nave with north Chapel, a north and south transept, and a chancel, with a belfry over the west end, which has two arched recesses, but only one Bell. There are no windows on the south of the nave and those on the north have been modernised. There is no pavement in the western part of the nave , only the bare earth; the other parts have pavement of the rudest kind. The Church is of some length, and the north Chapel and transept range as an aisle outwardly. There is a rude misshapen arch opening from the nave to the north Chapel, but no arch to the south transept. The chancel arch is most rude, but pointed, with stone blocks against each side of it upon a plinth; and a square aperture into the nave, on the north side. The chancel has a plain stone vault, with stone seats on each side of it. There are rude segments of arches opening north and south of the chancel, and communicating with the transepts by odd passages which cut off the angles, and form very large coarse hagioscope. There is a piscina south of the altar. The east window is Decorated of two lights. The roofs are open and out of repair. The font is an octagonal block, very plain. There is a stone seat along the west end of the nave. The external walls are whitewashed.

This Church offers an interesting specimen of the rude local peculiarities , and it might be wished that it was more cared for. [In 1874 it was carefully repaired and restored, mainly by members of the family to which the present condition of the neighbouring Church of St Bride's is due]

1920 RCAM Church dedicated to St Peter.

The plan comprehends a nave with north Chapel, a north and south transept, and a chancel, with a belfry over the west end, which has two recesses but one Bell. The Church is some length, and the north Chapel and transept range as an aisle outwards. The chancel arch is most rude but pointed, with stone blocks against each side of it, upon a plinth; and a square aperture into the nave on the north side. There are rude segments of arches opening north and south of the chancel communicating with the transepts by odd passages which cut off the Angles and form very large hagioscopes. There is a stone seat continued along the south hagioscope. There is also a stone seat along the west end of the nave. The external walls are White-washed.

On plan the Church comprises nave 39 ½ ft by 15 ½ ft, chancel; 27ft by 13 ½ ft, north transept 14 ½ ft by 12 ½ ft , south transept 14 ½ ft by 12 ½ ft and double Bell-cote on the west gable.

In 1874 the upper portion of the walls was rebuilt, and a baptistery sunk at the west end; modern windows were inserted and the walls cemented. Both transepts have squints to the chancel, each lighted by a small opening. In the south chancel wall a plain piscina, and between it and the south east angle is a rude corbel. The chancel is slightly deflected to the south; it has a barrel vault. The font bowl is square with chamfered corners diameter 28in externally and 21in internally, with a depth of 8in and of the usual cushion style; the shaft and base are modern. In the north transept is a slab of the year 1638

The fittings include a plain bronze hand-Bell with a broken clapper and rudely shaped wooden grip formerly used in the village to summon the fishermen and other parishioners to meetings and burials. It has a total height of 9 ½ in a mouth diameter of 6 ½ in and a height of 4 ½ ins. There is no inscription —Visited 14th September 1920 RCAM

Gatholm Island

It is only at low tide that this little island ,measuring about 600yds by 150 yds is accessible from the main portion of the parish, and on the day of our Inspecting Officers visit, nothing could be done but survey it from the Horse Neck. The description given in the Pem. Arch. Survey seems to be quite accurate – “On the island of Gatholm we counted more than one hundred hut foundations; these differed in several particulars from the so-called Cytiau'r Gwyddelod found Throughout Wales. The Gatholm foundations varied greatly in size and shape: one measured 30ft by 12ft. None of them was faced with stone. In addition to the hut foundations there were eight enclosures, the largest measuring perhaps the eight of an acre. There were a considerable number of flint chips on the island but no water.”

Roman Pottery and coin

Mr T C Cantrill of the Geological Survey reported in 1910(Arch Camb p271) the finding of worked flints, Roman Pottery and a coin of Carausius among the remains of a hut settlement – visited 14th September 1920.

Marloes or Gatholm Sound Rath

A well preserved earthwork somewhat difficult of access, and far more so prior to the draining of Marloes Mere. The work overlooks Gatholm Island, the field on which it stands being known as Rath. The promontory 120ft north to south by 200ft east to west is defended on three sides by almost perpendicular cliffs; on the north by a triple line of banks and ditches. The innermost rampart rises from the level of the enclosed area some 8ft and has a fall of 12-14ft to a ditch. Its length is about 200ft; the bank is slightly curved. Beyond the ditch on the east is a platform overlooking a steep slope to the sea, and showing traces of a low protecting bank. The second rampart rises some 4 ft and drops 3ft to its ditch which at the west end also becomes a platform. The outermost line of defence is 7ft high; the ditch is now much filled in. At the eastern end this bank unites with the second line, thus doubly protecting the roadway leading to the entrance into the camp which is placed at the eastern end of the ramparts. There is another entrance on the western side ; both have been much altered by landfalls. When viewed from the sands below, an exit from the camp can plainly traced down the cliffs on the south side of the work; though partly destroyed by erosion, it is clearly discernable. According to Pem Arch Survey, flint chips have been found within the enclosure ---visited 14th September 1920

Philbeach

Nearly a mile south east of Marloes village stands the modern successor to the old home of “Will ffilbatch who warried Sarah , daughter to Robert de Valle owner of Dale, and chief bard to Sir Rhys ap Thomas in 1485” (Pem Arch Survey) One of the round chimneys peculiar to the county survives from an earlier house. visited 13th September 1920

Tump Park; Hook Tump.

In the adjoining corners of two fields to the south of East Hook farm house is an irregular mound somewhat circular in contour. This was probably the caput of a small manor whose Independent existence came to a speedy end. The manor known as “Hook” was represented by the present farmsteads of East and west Hook. The existance of a deer park is thus accounted for – visited 14th September 1920

Tower Point Rath RCAM

Triple banks with intermediate ditches, having a central causewayed entrance, define a cliff-top promontory, roughly 96m by 80m: excavation, 1971 (Wainwright 1972), revealed two phases of dry-stone revetting within the ramparts and an internal, oval structure, 11m by 9.5m: a small assemblage; a flint arrowhead, bronze fragment & ring, possibly come from this site.

East Hook Farm,

situated some 180m south of the cliff-edge, formed part of the East Hook estate. The rear of the house is thought to derive from a Longhouse. In 1624 the farm was referred to as Nesshooke. At that time there was also a Nesshooke Mill, but its location is unknown. In 1773 the farm was referred to as Nesthook. The house is mainly Georgian in appearance, and its front section dates to 1760. In 1786-1790, the farm was in the ownership of John Lort esquire. In 1840 the farm covered some 240 acres. The house has a Chinese Chippendale staircase dating to the late nineteenth century, reputed to be one of only five in Wales.

A cliff-top enclosure, defined by a series of three banks and ditches to the north and north-east; traces of a 1.0m wide rubble wall have been noted on the crest of the inner bank, thought also to have been revetted internally; there is a causewayed entrance at the south-eastern end of the defences: the internal area is at present only 40m by 62m.

(source Os495card; SM70NE1)

Field visit by T. Driver and L. Barker on 22nd Oct 2009 confirmed survival of an earthwork bank along the inner edge of the cliff slope suggesting that we are seeing the original form and limits of the interior; coastal erosion appears slowed or negligible due to the lie of the bedding planes of rock. The stream on the south-east side of the fort also appears to have been enclosed within the defences of the fort with the addition of a free-standing length of bank and ditch beyond the stream to the south-east.

The Zelinda was a 78ft wooden schooner built at New Richmond, Canada, in 1835. At time of loss 15 November 1888, the vessel was owned by J Atherton & Sons, Liverpool. It was carrying a cargo of iron and hawsers/rope from Honfleur to Liverpool under the command of master D Curan, when it ran ashore on Marloes sands (winds being southwesterly force 5).

Meline

1839 Topographical Dictionry of Wales

Meliney, or Melinau, a parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 8 miles (S. W. by S.) from Cardigan; containing 492 inhabitants. This parish is situated in the northern part of the county, close to the road leading from Cardigan to Fishguard, and is intersected by the great road between the former place and Haverfordwest. It comprises 4056 acres. Rather more than half is inclosed and cultivated, and the remainder consists of barren heath and stony common, forming part of the Percelly mountain; the soil in that portion which is inclosed is tolerably fertile. The scenery, though not greatly diversified, is enriched with some branches of the river NeVERN, which flow through the parish; and the adjoining country is not destitute of interest. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £10, and in the patronage of the Rev. D. Protheroe: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £160; and there is a glebe of six acres, worth £10. 12. per annum. The Independents have a place of worship here, and conduct a Sunday school. There are some ancient mansions in the parish, within the limits of which also are the remains of a circular encampment, called Pen-yBenglog, defended by a single rampart.

1870-72, John Marius Wilson's Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales described Meline:

Meline, a parish in the district of Cardigan and county of Pembroke; on the river NeVERN, under Precelly mountain, 6¼ miles SW by S of Cardigan r. station. Post town, Cardigan. Acres, 4,523. Real property., £1,858. Pop., 414. Houses, 108. The property is much subdivided. An ancient camp is at Pennybenglog. The living is a rectory in the diocese of St Davids. Value, £140. Patron, the Rev. D. Protheroe. The Church was rebuilt in 1865; is in the decorated English style, of local stone with Bath stone dressings; and consists of nave and apsidal chancel, with W Bell-gable.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Dogmael – RCAM

The Church, erected in 1865, consists of a small single chamber terminating in an apse. It retains a portion of the north wall of an earlier structure, in which is a pointed doorway, now closed, having two rudely carved human heads on either side, and a fragment of a third above. The octagonal font and stem are from the earlier Church; they are probably of pre Reformation date. – At the rebuilding there was removed to Pen y beglog a well carved pew back bearing the following legend : SED: MATHILD; UX ; GEO; PER; PENE BENGLOG; GE 1626. (The pew of Matilda wife of George Per(rott) of Penybenglog, gentleman 1626) –visited 17th June 1920.

The State of Education in Wales 1847

There is a resident Clergyman. It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 6d to 8d a day with food and 1s a day on their own finding. The moral character is regarded as good. There are three resident land proprietors and ten farmers paying over £100 per annum but no day school provision for education of the poor of but almost all go to Sunday school. Many of the population cannot read and write.

Parish of Meline Pontgynnon Day School On the 29th of January I visited the above school . It was held in a room which formerly had been a cottage , but had lately been converted into an Independent Chapel. It contained no manner of school furniture. The children when they wrote, were obliged to kneel and write on the benches. At one end of the room was a large heap of turf. I heard 14 read the 1st chapter of St Marks Gospel to the master. The children made several false pronunciations, which the master left unnoticed. There was problems with general knowledge questions but most simple arithmetic questions were answered correctly. David Lewis Assistant

Sites of Interest

RCAM

Bedd yr Afanc

An oval grass grown mound 70ft by 27ft and 2ft high, placed on the northern slope of Prescelly, half a mile south east of Brynberian. The mound lies due east and west, and just visible in the turf upon it are some 25to 30 stones, forming an oval slightly less in size than the mound itself. There is little doubt that it is sepulchral in origin and purpose. The surface is much disturbed –visited 24th September1914.

Castell Llwyd

A tongue shaped enclosure on the spur of a Hill above the right bank of the river NeVERN, which at this point forms the parish boundary between Meline and NeVERN. On the south and west the steep slopes to the river constitutes the defences, and on the north two lines of markedly convex banks and ditches, which have been much disturbed. The inner rampart has a length of 150ft height of 6ft, and a fall of 15ft to the bottom of a ditch; the outer line of much the same length is not of equal strength. The entrance was probably at the east end of the banks. The enclosed area has a length of 250 ft from north to south. The surface of the camp is irregular, and two or three low leaps of stones may Mark the sites of hut circles. The point of the enclosure shows signs of scarping. The adjoining field to the south east is called Castell Bach, where are the remains of a small subsidiary earthwork of the same character as that just described – visited 7th August 1914.

Pen y benglog Camp

A promontory fort of triangular shape, distance about half a mile south east from Castell Llwyd. The spur of land known as Allt y Castell is defended by very steep slopes, that to the south being practically unScaleable. The defence to the north consists of a couble line of ramparts, each with a ditch now much silted up. The banks in places are almost 10ft high; both have been largely destroyed at the west, and much lower elsewhere. The enclosed area had a length of some 150ft and a width of 100 ft –visited 22nd June 1920.

Castell Mawr

This earthwork is one of the largest in the county, the enclosed area being four acres. It stands on the sumitt of a Hill 450ft above sea level, about half a mile south of the parish Church, 500 yds east of Castell Llwyd, and a similar distance north of Pen y bnenglog. The defence consists of a circular rampart and ditch. The bank rises to a height of 8ft and falls 15ft to an almost obliterated ditch; it is built of dry stone walling largely hidden under fern growth. There are east and west entrances opposite each other. They have a width of about 30ft, and, so far as the growth permits of observation, do not appear to have been much altered. The interior, 100feet in diameter, is divided diagonally by a bank which probably is part of the original plan. At neither end does it join the main rampart, a space of 20ft being left between them. The inner bank has a height of about 8ft and is of similar construction to the outer. The enclosure is known as Parc Castell, and the field immediately north west as Parc Gerreg Llwyd, the field of the grey stone. An iron spearhead, with a sharp spike fitting into a socket in the shaft, was ploughed up in the field south of the camp (Pem Arch Survey). Enquiries as to the whereabouts of this object have met with no success – visited 7th August 1914.

St Dogmael's Well.

Immediately outside the churchyard fence is a well which is known as Ffynnon Dogmael. The water for the Church font was formerly taken from it, but no traditions of healing are attributed to the spring, and the well space precludes total immersion – visited 17th June 1920.

Ancient Trackway.

In the sheet of the Survey of the county the editor, referring to the early trackway on Prescelly, observes: “ Nowhere in the county of Pembroke can this old roadway be followed to better advantage-- it is known by various names – Via Julia, Via Flandrica, and the Pilgrim's way – and consists herabouts of a raised bank about 10ft wide, with indications of a ditch on either side.. it will be observed that the map maker has marked at intervals 'hole' 'picket and pile of stones'. The conclusion we arrived at respecting these was that the holes were of comparative recent construction and made for the purpose of cutting turf to drive off along the old track, but that they had been kept open and enlarged by the mountain sheep getting in to scratch themselves and shelter from sun and wind. With regard to the piles of stones and 'pickets' it seems as if the earthen bank which formed the track had at some period been repaired with stone in considerable quantities, and that then the bank had again given way and exposed the heaps of stones which had been used to mend it”

Garn Wen

A cottage 300yds east of Parc y Rhos House, and half a mile east of Brynberian Chapel. There is now no cairn, nor the tradition of one but the presence of much White quartz on the surface of the small enclosure probably marks the site of an early burial – visited 24th September 1914.

Parc y garn

The third field east of Glan Duad Fach House. Ploughing has from time to time revealed much stone about its centre where it is locally said formerly stood a small mound, but of this there is now no sign on the surface. visited 17th June 1920.

Rhos dywyrch Inscribed stone

The residence near which the antiquary Lewis Morris mentions the presence in 1746 of an inscribed stone. His note runs “in a loose stone 4ft long in the parish of Melin, near Rhos Dowyrch, the seat of John Howells gent. Near a Hill called Pen y Benglog, where there are old entrenchments, Mr David Lewis [of Pant y benne] found the following inscription 1746 (see Arch Camb 1896 p132)

Carn Breded, Carn Goediog, Carn Bica –

Natural outcrops on Prescelly – visited 22 September 1914.

Urn

In the course of quarrying at Dyffryn in February 1925, an urn of somewhat unusual character was discovered. It was found inverted, and broken, but has been admirably restored at the National Museum of Wales, and is now in the Museum of the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society. The urn is black in colour; 5 in high; diameter of mouth 4in of base 1 ¾ in The workmanship is good. It appears to be of the cordon type, and probably dates from the later Bronze age.

Finds

Spear Head –

In a field to the south of Castle Mawr was ploughed up “an iron spear head, with sharp spike to fit into the socket in the shaft. Perhaps the weapon of a High Sheriff's javelin Man” (Pem Arch Survey)

Spindle whorl.

In 1914 a very perfect spindle whorl was dug up near Carn Alw on Prescelly; its flattened side was marked by two circular double lines, joined by cross lines. It came into the possession of a late vicar of Eglwysrwrw, and was seen on the 18th June 1914, by our Assistant Inspecting Officer. Its present location is not known.

Castell Mawr, Meline

Castell Mawr is generally considered to be a later Prehistoric settlement enclosure, possibly of two phases, although it has been suggested that it is an earlier ritual or ceremonial henge enclosure reused in the Iron Age. The site was subject to partial geophysical survey in 1988.

The monument occupies the gently rounded summit of a Hill. It consists of a 1.3ha oval enclosure defined by: a slight inner bank; a broad and shallow ditch; a prominent outer bank, preserved as a hedgerow and apparently ditched. There entrances on the north-west and east. The interior is subdivided by a curving west-facing rampart and ditch cutting off the 0.7ha eastern part of the enclosure. No entrance between the two divisions has been identified.

The character of the main enclosure, with a strong outer bank overshadowing the weaker inner bank, has prompted the suggestion that it represents a Neolithic henge. In support of this flints have been found within the enclosure. However, the prominence of the outer bank may be a product of its reuse as a hedgebank and flints continued to be used into the historic period.

A tanged iron spearhead was found in the field to the south.

Milford Haven (the Haven)

Milford origin of the name

Acc/to South Pembrokeshire Place Names - P Valentine Harris.

Milford Haven. c1190, Gir. Camb. Milverdicus portus.

1291 - 31- Milford. The 'Ford' is undoubtedly N. fiord,' (Cf. Waterford) and the first part may be O.Sc. melf sandbank,' not OE. myln, 'mill.'

The Milford Haven (The Haven)

This name is derived from the ancient Norse 'Mille Fiord' (the Haven of the Thousand Fiords), and it is aptly so named, for the bays and creeks and indentations spread out on every side, and the main channel wanders like a river, branching high up into two channels, where it formerly bore the name of AberDaugleddau, the Haven of the Two Swords: Gledheu being the old British word for a sword: the little river whose two branches feed the Haven being called the Cleddau, from the same source.

Milford Haven Waterway is a natural harbour, a drowned valley flooded at the end of the last Ice Age. As one of the deepest natural harbours in the world, it is a busy shipping channel, trafficked by ferries to Ireland, and oil/gas Tankers.

Nelson, visiting the harbour with the Hamiltons in 1801, described it as the next best natural harbour to Trincomalee and "the finest port in Christendom"

By the late 18th century, the two creeks which would delimit the future town of Milford's boundaries to the east and west, namely Hakin and Castle Pill, were being used as harbours for ships to load and unload coal, corn and limestone. A ferry service to Ireland operated from Hakin around the start of the 19th century, although this ceased in the early 19th century.

1854 Milford Haven Cambrian Journal – Shakespeare's and Drayton's description of it.

SHAKESPEARE makes Milford Haven partly the scene of his play of "Cymbeline," where Imogen, hearing that Posthumous is there, inquires,

" How far it is

To this blessed Milford ? and, by the way, Tell me how Wales was made so happy as to inherit such a Haven."

In this same play Shakespeare makes Milford the rendezvous of foreign invaders, and there embarks and lands ambassadors.

Nor is he the only English poet who has signalized the merits of Milford. It is well described and lauded by Drayton, who flourished in the reign of James I., in his Polyolbion, of which this extract may suffice :

" So highly Milford is in every mouth renown'd
Noe Haven hath ought good, in her that is not found :
Whereas the swelling surge, that with his fomie head,
The gentler looking land with furie menaced ;
With his encount'ring wave no longer there contends ;
But sitting mildly downe like perfect ancient friends

Unmov'd of any wind, which way so e'er it blow,
And rather seem to smile than knit an angry brow.
The ships with shattred ribs, scarce creeping from the seas
On her sleeke bosom ride with such deliberate ease,
As all her passed stormes shee holds but cheap and base
So shee may reach at last this most delightful place
By nature with proud cleeves invironed round,
To crown the goodlie road."

Milford Haven Its maritime capacities. Its peculiar features as a Haven

Milford is a phenomenon in English enterprise and civilization. It is the attribute of these elements to improve natural resources to their use, as they themselves grow in maturity and development, With Milford the exact reverse has happened, it has fallen into disuse as the means, skill and requirements which rendered its qualities more desirable and more available, have increased. With the exception of the dockyard at Pater, almost its entire utility for the purposes of navigation or war live in the history of the past.

Four centuries ago Henry VII. entered Milford on his way to the throne; our chief poets record its activity in subsequent centuries; and Cromwell not only embarked there for Ireland with 15,000 men, but made it his chief war station and channel of communication with Ireland and France.

At the beginning of this century Nelson pointed out its peculiar advantages as a great naval depot, and the fact that during winds favourable for the egress of ships from Brest and Rochefort, it was the only harbour from which a fleet could sail to meet them from the south-western coast of England. Yet of so little avail was his advice, that since then Milford and its vast capacities have been gradually neglected and disused, and six or seven years ago even the mail packets between Waterford and Milford stopped running, and all communication between South Wales and Ireland entirely ceased ! Although it is no unusual thing for hundreds of vessels of all kinds of tonnage to put in to Milford in stress of weather, and there to lie at anchor in perfect safety till storms subside, scarcely a single cargo is ever landed, so utterly barren is the Haven of docks, Quays, means of transit, and the ordinary appurtenances of a sea-port. As regards its military defences, so grossly have these been neglected that, until lately a foreign fleet might have entered and sailed up the Haven, set fire to Pater dockyard, and landed any number of troops with scarcely any possibility of molestation from the existing means of resistance.

Of the peculiar mercantile and military capacities of Milford Haven it may be said, without fear of contradiction from any person competent to judge of either, that no such harbours exist, nor do any approach their merits, in the old world. Rio and St. Francisco may rival, but do not surpass it; Cork and Naples are no more to be compared to it than the Wye with the Thames, as a navigable river.

I will very briefly describe the peculiar features which constitute the superiority of Milford. The entrance is nearly due south. From the mouth of the Haven, lying between St. Ann's Head on the west, to Sheep Island on the east, the width is two miles and a Furlong, which decreases to one mile and three FurLongs at the narrowest part, between the east and west blockhouses.

To stand at the eastern point of the blockhouse is to enjoy one of those magnificent scenes of which we carry the image through life. The blockhouse is built on the bluff summit of a rocky cliff. Immediately before you lies the splendid mouth of this gigantic harbour, with the bold promontory of Dale and St. Ann's lighthouses immediately opposite. To the right the view extends over the whole area facing the entrance of the Haven before it turns eastward, and comprises an extent of some fourteen or fifteen square miles. Immediately on the right hand, and just within the entrance, stands Thorn Island, a towering and isolated rock, now being for the first time fortified. To the left is Sheep Island, which forms a bold feature at the eastern extremity of the same rock-bound coast. Seaward looms the Atlantic, and the broad expanse of ocean in the foreground of the landscape formed by the confluence of St. George's and the Bristol Channels.

Few sea views ever impressed me more intensely with depth, magnitude, beauty, and repose. May its last at-tribute soon pass away, and the fleets of the civilized world give life and animation to this stupendous work of nature!

Over three-fourths of the entrance, (with the exception of a few rocks easily blasted or buoyed), there is water enough to float the largest vessel at the lowest point of spring tides, varying in depth from fifteen fathoms at the west to seven fathoms at the east side ; and the depth of the main channel, and of the greater part of the entire width from shore to shore, continues up the whole course of the Haven, ranging from sixteen to nine fathoms up to Weare Point, where it shallows to five fathoms, thus affording an area of no less than eight miles in length, and ranging from one mile and a half to two and a half in breadth, deep enough and large enough to contain nearly all the fleets in the world, with a good bottom for anchorage throughout.

Within a mile of the opening of the inner Haven, on its southern side, and sheltered from every wind that blows, there is a spacious bay called Nangle, left dry at low water, but with sufficient depth at high water to float large vessels, over the whole extent of which there is a soft bottom. Into this bay ships which have lost their anchors are accustomed to run and take the ground with perfect safety, an advantage of no slight moment on a rock-bound coast like that of Pembrokeshire. The Haven at this point turns to the north-east, so that not only Nangle Bay, but up the whole length of the Haven, the shelter is perfect from winds at all points of the compass.

This immense advantage is enhanced by the nature of the shores, which rise sufficiently high on all sides to protect the loftiest ships, while the Haven is peculiarly free from gullies and eddies, which could destroy the lake-like calm which reigns perpetually on its deep and placid water.

" A pamphlet conteyning the definition of Milford Haven wherein is particularlie sett forth all or most of the roades Creeks Points HarboRowes Riding Places daungers and other matters of worth within and neere unto the said Haven searving chiefly for the ex- plaining and right understanding of a Mapp made of the said Haven of Milford by George Owen of the Countie of Pembroke esq.re. A.D. 1595."

" It is," he says, " a lardg and spatious harborough entering into the main land by estimation sixteen miles Long or more having all that space sufficient water to receive shippes of 60 or 600 Tons and in many places thereof the greatest vessell of whatever burthen that it on the seas may safely ride and harborow itself. The Haven after the entrance bendeth diverse waies making good land suckers over every roade of the same and shooteth forth on everie side divers large and spatious creeks making diverse landing places and safe harborowes from all winds and is of itself calm and gentle having within the same many good roades and cages &c. and for form it may be likened to the picture of some greate crooked and forked Tree having many boughs and branches some greate some little growing even up from the Butt to the Topp and the same branches being lopped and cutt off some nere and some Fair from the bodie of the tree &c.

" Depth of water. Att the entrance of the harborowe or the Haven's mouth and soe up very farr there is 16 fathom water and more at low ebb and at the ferry it is 8 or 10 fathom deepe att low water and as far up as Llangorne it is alwaies 6 fathom and good riding all along the channel.

"The water within Milford Haven riseth att full sea in a springe tide fflower fathome high and at ebb tide two fathome and between both according to the date."

He points out three places for fortification, viz., Ratt (Thorn) Island, the Stack, and Dale Point. The first is being constructed ; the Stack has been recently accomplished, (It is at present garrisoned with two men ! December, 1853) and Dale Point is about to be begun. Mr. Owen gives the dimensions of each of these islands, and recommends that the high ground in the centre of each should be hewn down. This has been done. Thorn Island, which he erroneously calls also Ratt Island, measured 18 perches in length, and 12 in breadth. It is about half a mile from the blockhouse on the east side of the Haven, farther in. A fort here, and at Dale Point opposite, he rightly says, would, " if not utterly de-fend it, yet would greatly annoy any shipp that should offer to enter the Haven, and also the fort would annoy and defend both the rodes of St. Mary well and Dale being the two cheafest rodes of Milford so that no shippes of the ennemies's should ride there without annoyance."

He describes the Stack Rock as a low ridge of stones running east and west. He makes it at the foundation 43 perches or 693 feet in length from east to west, and 12 wide, or 198 feet. " It was," he says, " so much covered at high water that only the ' Mount ' and a few points remain dry, the Mount being 48 feet by 24. This," he adds, " may be hewn so as to be three score square feet for a fort above high water. It is of a red sandstone easily hewn. There is a passage right through the rock. There was then plenty of water," he says, " for ships to pass between the Stack Rock and the shore."

The Dale Point. " This," Mr. Owen says, " was the terminus of an old mound, probably Danish, which with little labour would be repaired and made a stronghold and it is thought that if ennemies should land thereabouts that it weare one of the likeliest places they would first fortifie." It was 51 perches west and east Longitude, and 21 broad north and south, the trench was 18 perches over.

" Nangle blockhouse, East" he says, " never was finished and was begun in temp. Henry VIII. for to ympeach the entrance into the Haven but for no good purpose for that stood too high." It is now a small ruin.

" St. Mary well roade" he terms " the chieftest roade of Milford and safest upon most winds large and good anker hold and is about 16 fathoms."

It is well worthy of note that Mr. Owen gives a greater depth to the Haven in some parts than that of the recent soundings in the Admiralty chart, but an old map, published subsequently to Mr. Owen's, makes them much the same, showing that the water is not decreasing.

" Pennar Mouth is the creek that cometh upp to Pem- broke towne. This is the largest and greatest creek of all Milford. It passeth up into the land 3 miles and more and at the upper end it parteth itself into 2 branches and compasseth about the Towne and Castle of Pembroke serving the said Towne for a moate or strong ditch on every side thereof; a bark of 40 or 50 tons may enter this creek at low water and ride at anker att Crow Poole but noe further without helpe of the tyde. The Crow is a shallow or shelf a pretty way within the entrance of Pennar and is neere right against the very entrance and it is an oyster bedd, on the Crowe groweth the best oysters of Milford." He mentions that the poor people gathered them there without dredging. "It is a bigg and sweete oyster."

Of Milford itself Mr. Owen little dreamt when he thus dispatched its site, " Hubberston Point is the point next by west of Priory Pill the description whereof serveth to small use."

" St. Anne's Chapel," he says, "forms after Precelly the only landmark to steer for as there appears to be no Haven to all appearance at sea owing to the turn to the east which the Haven takes and which hides it from sight till it be entered." He recommends as a good policy that " if the enemy were on a sudden known to be at sea it would be a good plan to deface this landmark and erect it somewhere else to cause their shipwreck ! "

Dangers. He mentions a strong current between Stokholme, Caldey and the mainland beyond the mouth of the Haven.

" Dangers in Milford there are none, Save the Crowe & the Carre & the Castlestone."
Old Adage in 1595

In answer to the absurd objections sometimes raised by interested parties, that Milford has a rock-bound coast, and a bank six miles distant, it may be simply stated that shoals of vessels make the Haven often in violent storms, and frequently without pilots, in perfect safety, and have done so for ages past. A shipwreck there is a rare event. It may also be stated that, with the exception of six points of the compass only, ships can weigh anchor and sail out of the Haven in any wind without towing ; and as a glance at the map shows, they are then in the open sea, and are quickly in the Atlantic, if out- ward bound, without encountering any of the perils which beset the voyage either westward to Liverpool, or east- ward to London. In fact, it is only when vessels are past Milford on their way to Liverpool, that danger begins.

Captain John Laws answers to a Select Committee of the House of Commons, in 1853

Captain John Laws who knows the capacities of the south-western coast, and was examined by a Select Committee of the House of Commons, in 1853, on the Milford Haven Docks Bill, gave the following important evidence on these points:-

Question. Do you know Pennar Pill?

Answer. Yes.

Q. In your judgment is that situation suitable for the construction of commercial docks?

A. I think for about £400,000 you might make a floating dock at Pennar Pill that would answer every purpose better than that at Liverpool does, upon which six millions of money have been spent.

Q. You may effect for £400,000 what it has cost Liverpool as many millions to effect?

A. It has cost between five and six millions, and must cost a good deal more, and then they will have nothing like so efficient a floating dock as may be formed at Milford Haven for £300,000 or £400,000.

Q. As to the nature of the estuary or creek itself and the neighbouring land it enables that to be done?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the rise of the tides ?

A. The ordinary tides are from 22 to 23 feet.

Q. Is there any harbour in South Wales to which any of the very large steamers could come with security ?

A. No ; there is not a harbour in South Wales that a ship of 200 feet in length would get into safely.

Q. That is excepting Milford Haven ?

A. Of course any fleet could get into Milford Haven, but the other ports are all tidal ports with the exception of Bute Dock a vessel of great burthen could not get in safely.

Q. At Milford Haven they can be got in at all times of the tide?

A. Yes; a fleet can get in.

Q. Is it not the fact that the commercial steamers and the commercial ships are being made of much larger dimensions than formerly ?

A. Yes ; I have two or three friends who told me that if they could send their ships to take their coal in screw steamers to South Wales, they would send them just coal enough to London, then take in their cargo and on the coast of South Wales take in their coal and go on to China, Australia, and Long ocean voyages ; but they cannot do it now because there is no harbour.

Q. I understand you to say that the construction of docks where they are proposed to be made would, in the cases you mention, save the voyage?

A. It would not only save the voyage but more than that : take the case of corn. The clipper ships now going out have all small auxiliary steam power in them, besides their sailing requisites ; these vessels would go into any harbour on the coast of South Wales, if there were a harbour that could take them they would take in probably 2000 tons of coal that would be the very best freight they could take to Calcutta, Canton, or Australia it would be the best cargo they could take, if it was only to take them there and back ; coals fit for ocean steamers cannot be bought at any of those distant parts under £5 a ton.

Q. Let me distinctly understand you : at present there are no ports in South Wales which would admit vessels of this kind ?

A. There are not.

Q. You cannot take in coal there ?

A. No.

Q. How do they get their coal now?

A. The Liverpool steamers and all the American and New York steamers get their coal in this way. I am connected myself with a railway. It takes coal from the coal pit not more than 12 miles from Liverpool, which is of first-rate quality for all general purposes, but these ocean steamers ; although they can put them on board at from 6s. to 7s. a ton, they send round to Cardiff and Newport for the coal which costs them 22s. and 23s. a ton before they are on board. The only coals now fit for ocean steamers are those of Glamorganshire and Carmarthenshire.

Q. Not the anthracite?

A. Not anthracite, it is semi-anthracite.

Q. Is it not the fact that the same kind of coal is sent for as well to London for steam vessels ?

A. There is not a little vessel in this river but would give 35s. a ton to avoid the smoke and dirt of the ordinary Newcastle coal.

Q. Have you any doubt whatever that if proper docks were made at Milford Haven they would be of great public importance?

A. I have no doubt whatever in a national point of view ; for the supply of the fleet there can be no better place than the coast of South Wales. In the ordinary contingency of supplying the fleet with coals, it would become one of the most important arms of defence for the country. It takes almost double the quantity of Newcastle and Lancashire coal to produce the same amount of steam.

Opposite to the Weare Point, where the channel be-comes narrower, there exists a natural dock, entered by a narrow neck of water, called Pennar Mouth, which seems specially intended for the purpose to which it is at length happily about to be put, Milford being far less well placed for such an object, and, owing to the nature of the marginal bank, is a less convenient place for the formation even of landing docks.

Pennar Bay is entered by a narrow mouth, through which the little tributary river from Pembroke flows. It is scarcely a Furlong in width, immediately expanding on either side into a capacious creek. The entrance is two fathoms deep at the lowest water, and it is capable of being greatly deepened. It appears as if designed expressly for the construction of dry and floating docks of any requisite size. With reference to this gigantic basin, the docks now about to be constructed there, and the traffic in coal likely to be exported thence, we must again have recourse to Captain Laws' evidence.

Question. Is it not a fact that the south-west wind prevails a good deal on that coast?

Answer. It does Throughout the island.

Q. Is that a wind that offers any obstacles to vessels coming to Cardiff?

A. The whole Bristol Channel is a lee shore with a south-west wind.

Q. Is that an obstacle that does not apply to Milford Haven ?

A. No; it does not. I have come out of Milford Haven in a frigate when a heavy gale of wind has been blowing from the south-west, carrying away our fore-yard when we were about half channel over, and clawed off the shore notwithstanding.

Q. Is not a part of the steam fleet in the Mediterranean ?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that supplied with the same kind of coal ?

A. With Welsh coal.

Q. This would be the port from which the coal would come, if it could be brought ?

A. I have no doubt that, with the aid of the railway, coals may be shipped at this dock to a greater extent than any in England, notwithstanding that we hear that on the Tees and the Tyne they are shipping ten million tons of coal in the year. I think some of the young men in the room will live to see as much shipped in that dock, if it is made, as ever was shipped at the Tees or the Tyne.

Nearly opposite to Pater, where the navy yard is situated, is a point called Neyland, where there are great natural capacities and sufficient depth of water along the shore for landing Quays, and where lines of packet ships will doubtless shortly run. It will be the terminus of the South Wales Railway, until the other spur line is made from Carmarthen to Pennar Dock.

One word as to the topographical position of Milford Haven. It is more than a day's sail, even in ordinary winds, nearer to America and most of our colonies than Liverpool, with which it is impossible to avoid comparing it. Without exaggerating the difficulties of the navigation up St.

George's Channel, and round Anglesey, and up the Mersey, it will not be denied that they are formidable, both as regards time, cost, and actual danger.

There are, moreover, peculiarities in the bed and channel of the Mersey, which, under the influence of a certain concurrence of wind and tides, may at any time render the navigation of that river, for vessels of heavy draught, no longer possible.

As regards internal transit, Milford is but about 15 miles further from London than Liverpool, and it is for all England incomparably the best starting point for the entire western hemisphere. In February last storms from the west caused several disastrous wrecks of vessels leaving and entering the Mersey ; whilst not the slightest danger attended the entry into Milford Haven, or departure from it.

Such are among the chief claims and capacities of Milford Haven. There is not a little, paltry, muddy inlet on the shores of the three kingdoms, with any pretence to be called a port, on which more money and labour have not been expended than on this matchless Haven, whose vast advantages have stared us in the face for centuries of neglect, until its very name has sounded strange in our ears, and its position and qualities are a profound secret to three-fourths of the population; whilst the Commissioners appointed in 1845, to report, at the public expense (and of course for national objects), on tidal harbours, do not once even mention Milford in their report ! From its Long and dead repose, the time is come when Milford will pass into mercantile and naval life. Its quiescence is just over, its activity about to begin. From what has been said, it is evident that Milford has been hitherto locked up from two causes, want of docks, and want of inland transit. Both are about to be supplied. A company is already formed, and the Act obtained, for turning Pennar Bay into spacious and splendid docks. The South Wales Railway will, in a short time, carry a branch to Pembroke, and round the new dock. The dock will be actually completed (so great is the natural capacity of the place) for a sum little exceeding that which has been recently given for one neighbouring estate !

Let us now glance at the probable future which this prospect opens to South Wales and this district. The Atlantic navigation which will pour into Milford is scarcely a matter of doubt ; and the first course it will probably take will be the creation of an entirely new traffic direct to London. The journey and voyage to the United States will be so much shortened that this is almost a certainty. I am inclined to think that the existing South Wales line could not, even if it were a direct line, accommodate this extra traffic, together with the increase inevitably arising in the intermediate traffic between adjacent towns on that line. A glance at the enormous increase in the recent traffic of that railway already arising, will not only corroborate this view, but will also help to illustrate the immense wealth and industrial capacities of the district which the South Wales Railway skirts on its southern border.

Comparing the second with the first half of the year 1852, the total receipts of this line increased from £45,653, to £65,290, the mileage in both periods being 99. In the first half of 1853, the receipts increased to £95,548, the mileage open being 131 ; and it is worthy of remark that of this amount the merchandise traffic alone increased from £15,544, to £26,941, in the last half year, owing, I believe, chiefly to the dispatch of coal to Basingstoke for the Southampton steamers.

I have said enough to show that, even if not a single bale of cotton for the manufacturing Market ever finds its way through Milford Haven, there are the germs of a vast commerce and traffic flowing eastward from this noble harbour, and giving an equal outlet to the produce of our western counties, and the vast mineral wealth through which this traffic must necessarily pass.

Let me briefly call attention to the lines which new railways for effecting this communication would probably take, and, in pointing to these, I beg to be understood as regarding the matter purely with a view to broad and national interests. If Parliament had Long ago legislated for railway lines on the same principle, and checked the atrocious absurdities which local interests have perpetrated, the country at large might have reaped double the present accommodation its railways afford, and at half their cost.

A new line from Milford to London, avoiding the sinuosities of the South Wales line, will probably form the northern border of the great mineral basin, of which the South Wales Railway forms the southern border, and keeping nearly to the line of the level coach road, through Carmarthen, Brecon, and Abergavenny, cross the Severn, either at Gloucester, or the Lock Crib, two miles below Newnham.

From the latter place it might join the Great western at the Standish Junction, near Stonehouse, and so proceed, via Swindon, to London: the traffic thus feeding the Oxford, Basingstoke, Newbury, and South-Eastern lines on its way. Or, another and more Independent line would be that of a new railway the whole way through Gloucester and Oxford, and thence direct through Wycombe to London. along either line powerful local interests, as well as great national ones, would be served. A still more direct line (one nearly straight) might possibly be formed to Merthyr, across the Severn at the Aust Ferry (if Mr. Brunel has still the enterprise and pluck to undertake it), to a few miles below Swindon, and thence, using the Great western, or making an Independent line, via Farringdon. This would be the shortest line, and would, save at the Aust Ferry, be attended by few formidable engineering difficulties.

Such considerations and future requirements may be well postponed until a nearer approach to the time when they shall arise and force themselves on public attention. Even when they do, the South Wales line, connecting as it does most important towns and debouchures of several prolific mineral valleys, has nothing to fear from a rival, and would benefit by such an ally. It could not possibly carry the whole traffic of the Atlantic to London through Milford.

One great object in bringing these various features of the industrial position of South Wales into notice, is to direct immediate attention to the certain revolution about to take place in the present topographical distribution of our maritime traffic.

So far from exhausting the materials of the topic, I have simply endeavoured to show where they lie, together with the great germs of our future commercial greatness.

The enormous mass of coal which every bale of cotton landed at Milford Haven must cross on the very outset of its Long journey to the Lancashire factories, suggests the possibility that another fifty years may see a Pembrokeshire Manchester, as well as a successor to Liverpool, on this doubly gifted coast. The transition of a specific branch of industry is not a matter of very protracted or difficult accomplishment where several natural elements of its success exist in the new field. In this district four are combined :

1. Accessibility for the raw material, &c., and the re- shipment or transit of the manufactured article.
2. Abundance and cheapness of fuel for its manufacture.
3. Cheapness of labour.
4. An atmosphere peculiarly suited to this special manufacture prevails in this part of Pembrokeshire. It is well known that the highest numbers (that is, the finest qualities) of cotton yarn can only be spun in peculiar temperatures, and that many of the finer fabrics cannot be woven or even manipulated in cold and exposed places. So mild is the climate of South Pembrokeshire that in some parts, as for instance in the enclosed grounds at Stackpole Court, there is almost a tropical vegetation, and plants thrive in the open air which would require the protection of a greenhouse in most other parts of England.

1860 Handbook for Travellers --

As a harbour Milford Haven has not its equal in the whole world.; for its is capable of anchoring in safety the entire fleet of England. There is a handsome Church erected in the town by Mr Grenville on a spot which was designed to be the centre. It contains a vase of red Egyptian Porphyry, brought into this country by Dr Pococke, and inscribed to the memory of Nelson; it was intended to serve as a font but was pronounced too heathenish. There is also the twisted vane of the mainmast of the French admirals ship L'Orient blown up at the battle of the Nile.

The estuary of Milford Haven stretches for ten miles inland varying in breadth from 1 to 2 miles , having 5 bays 10 creeks and 13 roadsteads affording anchorage to the largest first rate. The tide passing up through its ramifications into the very heart of the county washes the towns of Pembroke and Haverfordwest situated at the extremities of two of its forks. It is well sheltered from the storms by undulating hills around but very destitute of trees and only scantily clad with vegetation, they present a desolate rather than picturesque aspect. A vessel may safely run in without anchor or cable as there are from 15 to 19 fathoms of water in most parts. Its importance was appreciated at an early period, and is attested by historical events which have occurred here. From Milford Haven the fleet of Henry II set out to conquer Ireland and here the French invading army 12000 strong sent over to co-operate with Owen Glendower against Henry IV affected their landing. Here Henry Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII disembarked with a scanty retinue of followers from Brittany; but being received with open arms by Sir Rhys ap Thomas and a chosen body of Welsh troops under his command, set forth to win a crown at Bosworth. Fortifications have recently been added by the Government at Popton Point, South Hook Point, Blockhouse Point, Dale Point, Stack Rock and Thorn Island.

Pembrokeshire sea trade before 1900 B J George

Milford Haven from early times was the base of much of Pembrokeshire's trade. In 1566 Dale and Angle were the largest villages. Dale being as big as Fishguard and owning three 8-9 ton ships. Its 18c exports included beer to Bristol but the village pier was in ruins by 1748. By 1800 trade had fallen away and the village ruinous and deserted (Fenton 1811).

Coalfield

The River Cleddau bisects the South Pembrokeshire coal field and was extensively used by coal boats. In some places vessels could be loaded alongside the banks but small Quays were built at Black Hill, Little Milford Hook, Lower Hook, Sprinkle, Landshipping, Landshipping Ferry and at Creswell. Sizeable cargoes went up the Eastern Cleddau to Blackpool. When ships outgrew the Quays, barges took the coal downstream to Llangwn pool or Lawrenny to be reloaded into sea-going vessels. Limestone from West Williamston was also transshipped at Lawrenny.

In 1774 the little harbour of "Harbaston Haikin" was generally full of ships loading and unloading corn, coal and limestone; Castle Pill was busy in the same way.

Trade deserted these villages and creeks and Quays when the towns were built.

Milford Haven was started in the 1790's and its docks were built in the 1880's ; Pembroke Dock grew in 1814 round the naval dockyard and in 1856 Neyland at the end of the railway line.

The shipyards around Milford Haven increased in importance after 1830 and some of the largest sailing ships ever built in the county were launched from Milford and Pembroke Dock. The important shipyards in Hubberston Pill had to close during the 1870's to make way for new docks and Castle Pill then became Milford's main yard. J and W. Frances built schooners and ketches in Castle Pill until 1909 when they launched the "Democrat" for owners in Braunton.

An early description

Description of MylFord Haven for fortifications :George Owen, writing in 1595

"I conceive three places chiefflie fit to be fortified that is Ratt Iland (also called Thorne Iland) the Stack and Dale Poynt." He everywhere speaks of 'The Nangle, 'not Nangle. As to the 'Iland,' he makes an error. Thorn Island, more commonly called Thorney (Ey, island), is distinct from Rat Island, which is a mere rock, nearer the Haven's mouth. Of Thorney, calling it Rat Island, he says, 'The said Iland Iyeth verie neere levell but not fullie of the faire rode of St. Mary well, soe that I crossinge over in a boate from the stack to the Nangle bay I lost the sight of Rat Iland a good space before I came neere the land whereby I guessed that if a forte were builded upon Rat Iland it could not annoy ships riding in St. Mary Well roade, but to that the Maryners that carried us over being Nangle men, and expert in the harborowe, answered that noe great shypinge could ryde soe neare the shore there by reasons of the shallowes but that they must made within viewe of Rat Iland.' - Further: 'The Stack is a rock or rydge of Stone, further up within the Haven and standeth between Iadie Chapped (St. Marylodge) and Southhooke pointe, but somewhat more west and lower downe than Southhooke poynte".

Further: 'It is thought that St. Mary Well rode is within Culveringe Shotte of the Stacke.'

Further: 'Few ships are seene to passe on the North side of the Stacke . . . but the Masters of the Harborowe tell us that they may well passe . . . for there is water sufficient and noe danger.'

Further: 'Shippe Iland is semperinsula, yt is an Island at full sea but not at lowe water . . . between yt and the mayne there is another peece of grounde and a greate ditch or trench betwixt yt and the mayne land verie hard to come to where there standeth the remnant of a towre built upon the entrance thereof as it seemeth, serving for a forte or defence of the same, and from the same peece of grounde you may goe into Shippe Iland dry foote at half ebbe but not without a ladder for the hard ascending of the same, but at every full sea the same is compassed about by the sea; the neighbours here reporte that the same was a place of retrete for the Countrey people in olde time to save them and their cattell from the Welshman that then often assaulted them.... [The confounding of the names of Rat and Thorn Islands is very curious, and he persists in it throughout; perhaps the 'Maryners of the Nangle ' misled him on this point. St. Mary's Well and Chapel are close to the site of the present Chapel Bay Fort; the well still exists, and traces of the masonry of the Chapel, now built upon, could be seen a few years ago.

The new fort of East blockhouse stands immediately behind the old unfinished one of Henry VIII.'s time whose walls still remain standing, the mortar in them is of extraordinary hardness. The 'towre' on the approach to Sheep Island is gone, but rough stone walls and earthworks of the ancient refuge can still be seen.

Popton Fort now occupies the site of the 'ould trench or sconce of earth,' and Nangle bay is as it was, save that there is no longer any landing 'neere the towne' except at actual high water. In several other paragraphs besides the one quoted he differs from 'Mr. Saxon and his Mappe, of whom he does not appear to hold a high opinion! The Carne (or Carrs) Rocks have now been joined to the Dock-yard by a jetty built out upon them and are no longer a danger to shipping.

The old Chapel of St. Anne, on the western point of the Haven's mouth (which Owen curiously does not mention, nor does he allude to Dale), was demolished in Queen Anne's time to make room for the first light- houses. These were rebuilt in 1800.)]

Haven Fortifications and the manning

The remains of pre Norman times earthwork fortifications can be found in many places on the cliffs lining the Haven.

The Normans built castles and churches with defensible towers but these though they could resist invasions they could not prevent the invaders landing and there are many places in the Haven as George Owen points out suitable for invaders to land.

13c Dale Castle

Dale Castle is a 13th-century Castle located close to the village of Dale in Pembrokeshire, Wales.

Built after the English invasion of South Wales, the Castle was originally built by the de Vales, descendants of a knight who had accompanied Robert Fitz Martin on his invasion of north Pembrokeshire. The male line died out, meaning that subsequent owners have rotated through the female bloodline. The Walter family of Roch Castle took ownership, from whom Lucy Walter, mistress of King Charles II and mother of the Duke of Monmouth was descended. It was then owned by the families of the Paynters, Allens and Lloyd s.

The modern house and farm at Dale Castle was re-modelled and re-built in 1910, incorporating parts of the original medieval Castle. The south wing of the current structure was the central block of the medieval Castle, 19.5 metres (64 ft) east-north-east to west-south-west by 17 metres (56 ft), with walls 2.4 metres (7 ft10in) thick.

Owned now by the Lloyd Philipps family and their trusts, they have sold much of the remaining non-core estate land holdings, including the island of Stockholm. The Castle is not open to the public.

Naturally for the Tudor's they realised how vulnerable the Haven was to invasion from Ireland or Spain as it was in the Haven that Henry Tudor landed with his uncle, Jasper Tudor disembarked in 1485 before his March towards Lincolnshire, ending in the Battle of Bosworth

Thomas Cromwell proposed the fortification of the Haven and two blockhouses were started at Angle and Dale but not completed.

1590

Two forts to defend the entrance to the harbour were started on either side of the entrance to the Haven – at Angle and Dale – but some authorities doubt whether either finished

1595

George Owen prepared a plan for the fortification of the Haven but it was not carried out

1643 Civil War Pill Fort

Richard Steele, a royalist engineer constructed Pill Fort near Milford Haven This was, according to the remains, an earthwork defence with only small remnants of masonry. The aim of this fort was to prevent the reinforcement of the Garrison of Pembroke Castle from the garrison of Haverfordwest.

Laugharne led an operation against this Royalist fort at Pill He had a small army of 250 foot, half seamen and half landmen, sixty horse, and a number of guns was ferried across to the north shore on 22 February 1644. Laugharne deployed horse and musketeers to cover the road from Haverfordwest installing 25 musketeers in the tower of St Peter's Church Steynton and set up his guns to bombard the fort by land while Swanley's ships bombarded it from the Haven. The next day, a Royalist counter-attack was beaten off and the Parliamentarians occupied the village of Pill. The Royalists called for a truce and surrendered on 24 February on promise of quarter. The Parliamentarians took 300 prisoners, eighteen Cannon, two Royalist ships sheltering near the fort and a good supply of weapons and gunpowder. Among those taken prisoner was John Barlow of Slebech whose estates were confiscated and who eventually went to France taking with him Lucy Walter's who used the name Barlow and had children by Charles II.

According to Fenton 1811

The last time it was used as a military post was during the civil wars in 1644, when it was considered one of the strongest posts the royalists had in those parts. The parliamentary forces in their attack on this fort were led on by Captain Willoughby, assisted by their little fleet under Admiral Swanley, and as the prints of the have it “animated with the presence of a good hearty old gentleman, Mr John Laugharne, Col Laugharne's father” With a wretched mixture of various sorts of artillery, as one demi culverin, a sacre, and five small field pieces and only two hundred and fifty foot, half seamen, such was the judicious position they took , so as to command the accessible sides of the fort and act in concert with the other troops stationed at Stainton under the command of Col Laugharne, that the garrison called by the victors in their narrative of their proceedings by way of derision “invincible” soon surrendered on quarter; where there were taken prisoners Mr John Barlow , master of the ordinance, as they term him a Church papist, with five captains and their inferior officers, eighteen great ordinances, six excellent field carriages, three hundred common soldiers with their arms and the Bristol ships which Lord Carbery had just procured to protect Milford and furnish ammunition, wherein were twelve pieces of ordinance and several barrels of gunpowder here at that time to use the sarcastical expression used by the parliamentary writers, “impounded” in shelter of the fort. Of the great importance this post we may judge by the effect the news of its surrender produced , which was no sooner brought to Haverfordwest than the royalists there under the command of Sir Henry Vaughan precipitately vacated that garrison.

Acc to Edwards, Emily Hewlett Castles and strongholds of Pembrokeshire Tenby 1909

Pill Castle The Fort overlooking Pill Haven (Welsh pwll a bay) was built by Royalists for a place of defence during the Civil Wars. A certain amount of walling and masonry exists. The fort was surrendered by John Barlow to Parliament forces in 1644; it was considered a strong place, and contained many guns. John Barlow was the relative of the famous beauty Lucy Walters, who lived at Rhosmarket, near by. After the break-up of Royal power Barlow took Lucy to the Hague, where she became “acquainted” with Charles II.

Pill Fort: The construction of Pill Fort began during the autumn of 1643. The King's forces in Wales were anxious to prevent re-enforcements from reaching the Parliamentary garrison of Pembroke Castle and, more importantly, wanted to provide a safe landing place for royalist troops who were expected to arrive from Ireland. This was regarded as so vital that King Charles granted £400 towards the cost of raising men and building the fort. A Captain Steele, described as ‘a great talker who pretended much to be an engineer’, arrived to supervise its construction. A site was chosen on the west bank of Castle Pill, then known as Prix Pill, where a headland reared up at the junction of the pill and the waterway. This steep-sided bluff, known in later centuries as ‘The Gunkle’, may originally have been an Iron Age fortification. The new defences seem to have consisted of stout earth banks, probably strengthened with timber or even masonry. An Archaeological survey of the site carried out in the early 20th century mentions that some stonework was still visible. As the Winter wore on, two Royalist ships, the Globe and the Providence, arrived from Bristol carrying guns and ammunition. Two culverins, two demi-culverins, two sacres and two minions were placed within the fort, as well as some of the ordnance from the ships themselves. Scarcely had the fort been completed than it met its first challenge. On 23rd January 1644, five Parliamentary warships, under the command of Captain Swanley, arrived in the Haven. A few days later three other vessels joined this little fleet. The Globe and the Providence took shelter in Prix Pill, under the protection of the guns in the fort, which over the following week exchanged occasional shots with the Parliamentary fleet. During one of these cannonades, a Cannon ball smashed into the empty bed of one of the Parliamentary captains. On 24th January, a conference took place on board Swanley’s flagship, attended by Major-General Rowland Laugharne and Colonel John Poyer, the leaders of the garrison at Pembroke, during which Swanley promised his help in driving the royalists from the county. As a result, with a mixed force of foot soldiers, sailors and artillery, Laugharne was able to take the enemy strongholds of Stackpole House and Trefloyne House.

The turn of Pill Fort came next. Early on the morning of 23rd February, Laugharne crossed the waterway with a force of 250 foot, half of them seamen, sixty horsemen, a demi-culverin, a sacre and five smaller guns. The Crescent frigate guarded their passage and they probably came ashore in the vicinity of Newton Noyes. A troop of musketeers was placed in the tower of Steynton Church to prevent an attack by the royalist garrison of Haverfordwest, whilst a body of horse scoured the countryside. The larger guns were placed on the high ground on the eastern shore of the pill, a number of local people assisting the troops to drag them into position. A bombardment of the fort began, in which four of the parliamentary ships took part, as well as a gun placed on the south side of the Haven opposite the fort. Nightfall put an end to the cannonade. The soldiers were forced to sleep in the fields around their guns, it being a bitterly cold night. Early next morning the main attack commenced. Laugharne's force made its way around the head of the pill and after attacking and scattering an ambush awaiting them near Steynton, they swiftly occupied the village of Pill and the nearby ruined Chapel of St Thomas Beckett. The royalists were now under concentrated fire from several directions. Two of their garrison had been killed and it was not long before an offer of surrender was made. Laugharne's men quickly entered the fort, taking prisoner three hundred men and eight officers, one of whom was John Barlow, master of ordnance, a member of the Barlow family of Slebech. Eighteen great guns and six field carriages were captured, as well as the two ships sheltering in the pill.

There are few reminders to be seen today of the action at Pill Fort. The overgrown ramparts existed until recently on the Gunkle, but were bulldozed flat in the early 1990s; bungalows were built upon the site. St Thomas ' Chapel was restored in the 1930s and can still be seen behind the houses on the Rath.

Civil War Pwllcrochan

During the Civil War ,two companies of Royalists landed at Pwllcrochan, and took up their quarters in the Church until more suitable quarters could be provided for them. The next day they were surprised by a party of Parliamentarians under Poyer, but they resisted stoutly until allowed to March away and embark for Cardiff, after giving an undertaking not to land again in Milford Haven

1649

Milford Haven - Oliver Cromwell embarked for Ireland from the Haven on his way to invade Ireland

1689

The Privy Council discussed the problem of the defence of the Haven and an engineer was sent to survey the area but no further action was taken

1748

Lewis Morris carried out a survey of shipwrecks and navigation in the Haven and suggested that a small fort be built on Stack Rock -- nothing was done

1757

Lt Col Bastide (Director of Engineers) was sent to survey the area and advise on suitable sites for forts and batteries.

He suggested -- Dale point, Great Castle Head, west Angle, Popton Point, Paterchurch and Neyland and a floating battery anchored 500yds north of Chapel Bay. --- The effective range of the Cannon was about 500yds so there were areas not covered.

An alternative plan provided for a fort at Paterchurch point, one at Llanion Point and one at Neyland. The Ordnance department was put in charge of construction and land purchased. Only one the Paterchurch fort was started but it was not completed. The Paterchurch fort that was started stretched from the Carr Rocks to the foot of St. Patrick's Hill and the walls were built in the form of a zigzag with a total area of 10 acres. When the remains of this fort were demolished in 1836 during an expansion of the yard, the masonry of parts was so hard that it to be blown up to remove it.

1758 According to the Map of 1758 The Dale point battery was to have 20 guns, Paterchurch 24 guns, Neyland 12 guns, West Angle 10 guns Popton point 16 guns, Piston Point 22 guns

1800's Fortifications Milford Haven

Batteries of guns were sited at Milford Haven to defend the dockyard there one at Hakin Point and one on the site of St. Katherine's Church. It is not recorded what guns were actually sited there. (see Fenton below)

According to Fenton 1811 (Tours)

Nor has the defence of the place been overlooked, as two batteries have been erected one on side of the new town mounting seven guns , and another on the opposite side mounting seven guns.”

(The one of the side of the new town was near St Katharine's Church and the old Chapel was used as a magazine. And the other on the opposite side mounting seven guns – did Fenton mean the opposite side of the town or the opposite side of the Haven.(Popton?)

1852 Gordon of Khartoum

He was commissioned in 1852 as a second lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, completing his training at Chatham

1854 promoted to full lieutenant and his first assignment was concerned with the construct fortifications at Milford Haven; these plans were eventually implemented.

Concerns raised by Royal Commission on the Defence of the United Kingdom about the potential threat posed by the French Navy which had achieved numerical equality with the British fleet, prompted the construction of a number of Forts at various strategically important coastal sites, including Milford Haven. Mgr William Jervois RE was appointed to oversee the designs As Lord Palmerston, then Prime Minister, had appointed the committee The forts became known as Palmerston Forts or Follies

Some of the fortifications in the Haven were actually built before this Commission but are miss-refered to as Palmerston Forts.

Most of the forts are now disused.

1858 west block House

The original west blockhouse was a fortified tower dating from about 1580. The present west blockhouse was built in the 1850s to guard the entrance to the Haven. Solidly constructed out of limestone and granite, the fort had accommodation for 41 men and one officer and a battery of six 68-pounder cannons.

Behind the battery is the barracks consisting of two floors and the roof where there is a loopholed parapet and the remains of the positions where the two 3pdr quick fire guns were mounted. The entrance to the barracks is over a drawbridge that spans the moat and levels out to form the terreplein for the gun battery.

In 1872 it was decided that the proposed guns at West blockhouse and Thorne Island should be 80pr rifled mussel loaders. In 1893 the battery was reduced to practice status until disarmed in 1900. A short time later, between 1904-05, gun emplacements were built on the cliff top above the old fort; these gun emplacements can be seen behind the fort. In the First World War West blockhouse was manned by the Royal Artillery, and it was brought into service again in the Second World War when it was again garrisoned by the Royal Artillery and was the 'Examination Battery'. The Gann, Dale responsible for ensuring ships neither entered nor left the port without authority. Beyond the fort, in Warwick Bay, is the small Quay where all the fort's supplies would have been landed. West blockhouse has been restored by the LandMark Trust and visitors are able to stay there

1887 West block House Battery

Dale In 1887 it was proposed that a new battery be for 4 x 9inch rifled muzzle loaders guns be constructed near West blockhouse Fort for defence of the entrance to the channel, however the Committee decided that: despite the advantages of the site, it is inadvisable to place heavy guns in so isolated a position which would necessitate a self-defensible work with a considerable garrison. The battery was not constructed. The Battery at west blockhouse was eventually built on the recommendation of the Montgomery Report to command the entrance to the Haven and cross fire with east blockhouse Battery opposite. The five guns were in position by the time of the Owen Report which declared that the three six inch guns were not required; these guns were not dismantled immediately but remained in place as a practice battery for battle practice. In the First World War the three 6-inch guns were withdrawn at an unspecified date as was a 9.2-inch gun in 1917. At a time after the war two 6-inch guns, probably from South Hook Fort, were mounted in the 6-inch battery followed by a 9.2-inch gun in 1933. An armament return of 1937 shows the 6-inch battery as the examination one and the 9.2-inch battery as mounted in reserve; just prior to the outbreak of World War II the 9.2-inch guns were withdrawn. The 6-inch guns probably remained in position until the dissolution of coast artillery in 1956 when they too were withdrawn. The battery lies some 150 yards to the west of west blockhouse Fort and at a higher level with a good view seawards and of the entrance to the Haven. The positions for the five guns can easily be made out with their concrete aprons, the 9.2 inch positions have been partially filled in as has one of the 6-inch positions. The underground parts containing the shelters magazines and stores have been buried. The two BC Posts appear to have been buried and are covered in vegetation. The hutted camp and other buildings that lay behind the battery have all been removed. A practice PF cell and a spigot mortar position survive at the site.

1850/1858 Dale Fort

Dale Fort Dale Point was fortified in Napoleonic times, with a battery of cannons protected by an earth bank

A work (battery) was recommended for Dale Point in 1829 but nothing was done until General Sir John Burgoyne reiterated the need for such a work in 1850. During the 1850s the battery was constructed, no definite dates can be given as official records are silent but it had been completed by 1858. The Fort is situated at the end of the Dale peninsula and is cut off from it by a ditch that reaches down to the shoreline on either side of the peninsula. The ditch is covered by a tiered loophole wall which at its highest point forms a plateau where a battery shaped like a Tudor bulwark, with embrasures for three guns projects out into the ditch covering it on both sides. Inside the Fort are separate soldiers and officers barracks stores and magazine; the gun battery is at the eastern end of the site, and is tiered in that the first four guns are at a slightly lower level than the last three, all fired en Barbette; originally there was a small magazine behind the four gun battery but this has gone. Alterations over the years have been made, notably an accommodation block has been built on top of the main magazine. The Dynamite gun position survives outside the dining area together with the underground chamber. Its garrison of 60 had charge of one 80lb Millar's Pattern shell gun, seven 68lb guns plus two 32lb guns for landward defences. The battery was originally proposed to prevent an enemy making use of the anchorage at the mouth of the Haven. In 1858 the main battery was criticised as being too close to the rock face behind it rendering it potentially untenable during a bombardment; Dale Fort was one of the last built in Great Britain to counter wooden-walled, sail-driven warships and by 1871 it was considered obsolete. The fort was reoccupied in 1892 and was altered to allow the installation of a Zalinski dynamite gun, a new pneumatic coastal defence weapon which could fire a 15" shell weighing 966lb over 4,500 yards using compressed air. A paddle-steamer called the Harpy was used as a target and the trials proved to be highly successful, but in the meantime a bore-safe high explosive called Lyddite had been invented, rendering the elaborate compressed air system unnecessary.

The War Office sold the Fort in 1902 to Lieutenant-Colonel Owen-Evans (RE) who converted it into a private residence for himself and his family.

It was used as a signal station in the First World War, and was also one end of the Haven's boom defence (the other end was at Thorn Island). The fort was again pressed into service in WW2 when it was used as a Degaussing Range to measure the magnetic signatures of ships to ensure they were not capable of setting off magnetic mines laid by the Luftwaffe. If the signature was too great the ships would be ordered into Milford Docks to be 'degaussed'. The fort is now a Field Studies Centre and public access is limited.

1858 South Hook Fortifications

The Fort sometimes referred to as a battery, was the result of the proposals of the 1858 Committee. It was some 80 to 100 feet above high water and was secured at the rear by a defensible barracks capable of mounting guns on its roof and connected to the batteries by a parapet and ditch on each side. The western battery mounted fifteen and the Eastern one five guns linked by a covered way. The barracks is a two storey building with a bomb proof roof; the outer wall some four feet thick forms a scarp 35 feet in height. Its outline is an arc culminating in two demi-bastions at the rear with two small caponiers covering the scarp wall. Just outside the rear of the barracks is an underground tunnel leading to the main magazine. The Fort was the cornerstone of the Haven's defences until batteries were built at East and west blockhouse; it was manned by regulars and militia and in 1886 was used during the Milford Haven Experiment, an exercise to assess the effectiveness of the minefield, searchlights and guns to defend a commercial port. The western fifteen gun battery was demolished in 1889 and replaced by batteries for two 10 inch breech loader however only one gun was mounted. These batteries were replaced between 1900 and 1904 by ones for three 6-inch and a 9.2 inch breech loaders. At the western end of the covered way a battery was built for three 6pdr quick fire between 1897 and 1898 but these guns were never mounted, instead the battery was adapted to take two 12pdr quick fire. The Fort was used in 1890 to evaluate a 10 inch breech loader gun on a Royal Carriage Department mounting. The Owen Report declared the 9.2 inch gun superfluous so in 1907 it was dismantled and sent to west blockhouse to replace a gun there that had developed choke.

During the First World War a 6-inch gun was removed from the Fort and a 12pdr quick fire was withdrawn; sometime between 1919 and 1928 the two remaining 6-inch guns were dismantled and sent to west blockhouse. Finally in July 1935 the two 12pdr quick fire guns were dismantled and sent to East blockhouse to form a practice battery.

In 1914 there was an examination battery at the Fort during the war. The Fort was sold in 1936 however it was requisitioned at the beginning of the Second World War and became HMS Skirmisher operated by WRENS controlling all Naval movements in the Haven. In the late 1950's the Esso Petroleum Company purchased the Fort and built an oil refinery however the future of the site remains uncertain as the refinery has been demolished. In October 2005 the fort was empty, but secure.

1850/1860 Stack Rock Fortifications

A work on Stack Rock went back to the initial proposals for the defence of the Haven made by Colonel Bryce in 1817. General Burgoyne reiterated the need for a work there and in the mid-eighteen fifties a three gun tower was built; it is not generally appreciated that this tower still remains, as it was enveloped by the casemated work that was built in the eighteen sixties. The tower had a basement for stores and the magazine, at ground floor level was the main gun battery. Above it was the first floor with accommodation for a garrison of an officer and thirty men; above the first floor was the roof which may have had an earthen bomb proof covering that was removed at a later date. After the casemated work had been built the tower was adapted for other uses though the first floor remained as accommodation for officers. The second Fort was originally to be a circular casemated one for 45 guns, with two tiers of casemated guns and a third tier on the roof firing through embrasures men.; there was to be barrack accommodation for 250 men. The second fort completely enclosed the older gun tower. The ground floor had the entrance and the casemated battery covering the Haven where sixteen 10inch rifled muzzle loaders guns were mounted behind armoured shields. In the gorge at the rear at the entrance were three 9-inch rifled muzzle loaders guns; underneath the casemated battery were the magazines and stores. Above the gun casemates at first floor level were the casemated barracks for 5 officers and 175 men that faced inwards, again in the gorge was a casemated battery for four 9-inch rifled muzzle loader's. There were to be, on the roof of the casemates, three turrets mounting two 25 ton guns in each, but like the Solent Forts at Portsmouth, these were never built. With the improvement in range and accuracy of artillery by the eighteen eighties the Fort was considered weak and the magazines insecure; it was proposed to remove eleven of the 10-inch rifled muzzle loaders and all the 9inch rifled muzzle loaders so that the Fort could be strengthened. By 1895 only five 10-inch rifled muzzle loaders remained in the casemated battery although the 9-inch rifled muzzle loaders remained in the gorge; also by this date the fort had acquired two 6pdr quick fire guns to cover a nearby minefield. In the basement most of the old magazines were filled with concrete and those that were not were adapted for other uses. A number of the armoured shields were removed from unused casemates and sent to the casemated battery at Hubberston Fort. Three 10-inch rifled muzzle loaders barrels remain on the fort but all are partially dismantled.

In 1902 positions for four 12pdr quick fire guns in two groups were built on the roof of the casemates with positions for four maxim guns. In the meantime all the 9-inch rifled muzzle loader's had been withdrawn and two of the 10-inch rifled muzzle loader's, these latter ones were replaced by two searchlights. The remaining three 10-inch guns were retained as 'run past' guns until 1907/8. During the First World War two of the 12pdr quick fire were withdrawn; by 1929 the searchlights and the remaining two 12pdr quick fire were removed and the Fort was sold in 1932 for £60. In many ways the Fort is the most interesting of the Haven's defences though sadly the most inaccessible; The fort was put on the Market in June 2005 for £150,000.

1860 Fort Hubberston

Fort Hubberston was approved by the Royal Commission of 1860 as part of the defences of Milford Haven. It was completed in that year as a nine gun installation and housed about 250 men in D-shaped, bomb-proof barracks which were defended at the landward side by a ditch protected by a counter-scarp gallery. The casemated battery was situated further down the headland and originally comprised 28 guns. In the 1870s, eight of the guns on top of the casemates were removed and replaced by Moncrieff guns. These guns were set on carriages and operated on a counterweight system so that they remained hidden in special concrete pits until the time came to fire them, when they would be hoisted into position; although partially infilled with concrete for a 12-pdr quick fire practice battery these concrete pits are still visible. In 1884 the infantry garrison was removed. In 1885 the three remaining Moncrieff guns were removed. In 1908 its sole armament was one 12pr. quick fire gun in a practice battery. It was never upgraded with modern weapons and shortly after World War One it was abandoned. The casemates were bricked up early in the 20th century. In WW2 it was pressed into action as a communal air-raid shelter and as an American army camp, but it has since fallen into disrepair and has been so badly vandalised that visiting the fort is not advised. A small brick structure built over the east magazine and visible from the road is a WW2 mine-watching post.

1861 Fort Scoverston

This fort was originally intended to be the central work of the Northern line defences of Milford Haven, consisting of six works covering the northern land approach. When the plans were examined by the Government the entire line was struck out, but after some deliberation, Scoverston was reinstated to cover likely approaches to Neyland and Milford Haven. It was commenced under contract in 1861 and continued under two more in November 1862 and April 1864. In 1880 it was described as an excellent work, in good order, only requiring minor modification of parapets for the reception of the standing portion of the armament. In 1883 it was proposed to store the movable armament for the land defences in Scoverston. The Secretary of State for War did not approve this. They do not appear as mounted on any lists. A hexagonal work with sides 130 yards in length, it is surrounded by a dry ditch 36 feet wide at the bottom with an escarp of masonry 22 feet high. The counterscarp is cut from natural rock. It is flanked with one double and four single caponiers on two storeys with access over a rolling bridge and tunnel through the gorge. The work is enclosed by a rampart with chemin des rondes, covered way and glacis. It was planned to mount 32 guns on the ramparts and had accommodation for 128 men in bomb proof barrack rooms, together with a main magazine and stores. The rear faces are protected from reverse fire by a parapet and a traverse thrown across the interior parade. One source states that it was never armed and no armament is shown on the 1886 RA and RE Works Committee armament return.

For most of its life it served as barrack accommodation or stood empty under a caretaker. During WWI the fort became the main camp for troops manning extensive trenches and fieldworks between Weare point and Port Lion. A large number of hutments were constructed within and outside the fort to serve a training and transit camp. It was abandoned after WWI and was sold to the local farmer in October 1932 for £1,400. During WWII it saw active service once more as an AA gun battery was fitted and was used by the locals as an unofficial air raid shelter. It was used to store large quantities of ammunition during the build up to the Normandy landings. After WWII it was abandoned once more and is now empty, derelict and much overgrown. The caponiers are intact and relatively dry. Their intended armament appears to have been machine guns. The terreplein is devoid of gun emplacements but the expense magazines were constructed. The main magazine survives and shows signs of having been fitted with racking for ammunition.

1891 Chapel Bay Fort

The battery at Chapel Bay overlooking Milford Haven was built in 1891 and had three ten-inch rifled muzzle loading guns that were replaced in 1900 by three six-inch Breech Loading Mk VII guns on CPII mountings. The fort is privately owned and is in the process of being completely renovated.

1858 Fort Popton –

“Popton pointe is the Easter pointe of the Mowth of Nangle havon soe called of a little village neere the same called wester Popton upon this pointe there is an ould trench or sconce of earth”
Owen 1595

Popton Fort now occupies the site of the 'ould trench or sconce of earth,”

Popton Fort Built on a commanding headland overlooking Angle Bay and Milford Haven, Popton Fort was completed in August 1865 at a cost of just over £76,700. It had accommodation for ten officers (including one Field Officer), five Staff Sergeants, 158 NCO s and Privates in the barracks, 86 NCO s and Privates in the casemates and six married men

Sometimes referred to as Popton Point Battery, the Fort was built as part of the recommendations of the 1858 Committee and consists of an irregular hexagonal barrack block constructed of limestone ashlar and brick, the outer walls form a scarp 22 feet high flanked by six musketry bastionettes protected by a glacis. Connected to the barracks by a wall and ditch is the casemated battery for 11 guns, this battery was always intended to receive armoured shields but never did. On the roof of the casemates a battery for seven guns was built however it was considered weak and was remodelled to take six guns on Moncrieff carriages. At the same level as the Moncrieff battery was the open battery facing north over the Haven that was initially to mount 13 guns but was built for only 10, though only 7 were actually mounted. In the event only two guns were mounted in the Moncrieff battery and were removed in 1885. . In 1885 the two 7inch guns, together with three from Hubberston, were to be redeployed as armament for salients of works at Portsmouth.

In 1886 it was reported “The casemates are without shields and the bastions are weak. The Moncrieff Battery on top has been dismantled. Alternate casemates should be disarmed and the bastions strengthened. The guns in the open battery are too crowded. this battery should be armed with 2 x 10inch rifled muzzle loaders and 2 x 9inch rifled muzzle loaders. The main magazine is conspicuous from the sea.”

The next year the casemated battery was to be reduced to 5 guns and the open battery covering the Haven was to be remodelled for four guns; it seems little or nothing was done to reduce the number of guns at the Fort which retained its rifled muzzle loaders armament of one 10-inch and twelve 9-inch until it was disarmed in 1905.

The casemated battery survives with its open embrasures for eleven guns and on top are the pits for the six Moncrieff mountings; immediately behind the casemated battery is the sally port with the positions for the two rifled breech loaders guns that covered it. The open battery survives very overgrown though there are plans to cut back the vegetation. The barracks remains with its six bastionettes, the buildings inside were restored by British Petroleum after a period of dereliction but the roofs on them are modern. In 1912 the Fort was given to the Admiralty and finally sold in 1932 for £300 to a private owner. In the Second World War the RAF operated a flare path for flying boats from the redan. British Petroleum purchased the Fort in 1957 as part of their Angle Bay Ocean oil terminal and a set of pumps for a large oil pipeline to the Llandarey Oil Refinery were built in the casemented battery. The main magazine was demolished and five oil storage Tanks were built behind the casemented battery. The terminal closed in 1986 and the five storage Tanks were dismantled. The Fort is a Grade II Listed building.

1861 Chapel Bay Battery

1861 the Defence Committee considered a design by Colonel Jervois for a battery at Chapel Bay. The design was for a battery to mount six heavy rifled guns on Moncrieff mountings with a barrack for 3 officers and 60 men in the rear so disposed as to form a keep.

The Committee approved the design except for the Moncrieff mountings as the parapet was 122 feet above sea level and it was decided to mount guns en barbette. The whole work to be surrounded by a ditch and wall flanked by caponiers. Although Chapel bay was to be the site of a battery it was not until 1891 that the Battery was built for three 10-inch rifled muzzle loaders guns, it was square shaped surrounded by a dry ditch that on the western and eastern sides stretched down to the shoreline; in the ditch were two concrete caponiers, one in the south-east corner and the other on the western side reached by underground tunnels from the battery. Two guns faced north over the Haven the third faced west. Underground shelters were provided in a horizontal traverse, there were two underground magazines serving the three guns and the DRF position was provided on a higher traverse; caretaker's quarters were built immediately inside the entrance to the Battery.

Between May 1898 and March 1899 a battery of three 12 pdr quick fire guns was built outside the Battery on its eastern flank, from June 1900 to August 1901 the Battery was reconstructed to take three 6 inch guns, extra shelters enlarged magazines, living and office accommodation together with a number of other facilities., The three 6-inch guns replaced the two north-facing rifled muzzle loaders, the west facing rifled muzzle loaders position survives. There were a number of changes in the armament during the First World War that culminated in the last two 6-inch guns being dismounted and sent to East blockhouse Battery and mounted there. The last guns left the Battery in 1920 when the remaining two 12pdr quick fire were dismounted and the site was sold in 1932. The battery has recently been purchased by a retired army officer, Major George Gear who now lives in it. He is actively restoring it and hopes to open it on selected occasions as a museum.

The Battery was used as an adjunct to a farm until it was purchased for conversion into a private residence. The 12pdr battery was used in the Second World War when a Mining observation post was built on the eastern gun position; the battery survives though very overgrown.

Tudor East block-house:

On the cliff overlooking Rat Island, about three-quarters of a mile west North Studdock farm-house, are the poor ruins of a block House which, according to George Owen, was erected temp. Henry VIII. The term East distinguish it from a somewhat similar building (now destroyed) which was known as the west block House, in Dale parish. It is described in the Pem. Arch. Survey (p. 88) "24 feet from north to south by 13 feet from east to west. It was divided into two unequal chambers, each lighted by two windows looking east and west. The walls seem originally to have been about 15 feet high, but much has fallen, some recently. There seems to have been an enclosure on the north side, and a second building little distance off to the south-east, which was 22 feet by 9."

East blockhouse Battery

Built at much the same time as west blockhouse Battery on the opposite side of the Haven when it was decided to concentrate the defences at the entrance to the Haven to prevent hostile vessels actually entering the Haven before being engaged by the defences. During the First World War both 6-inch guns were withdrawn in December 1914 to be followed by a 9.2-inch gun in 1917. After a review of the defences two 6-inch guns from Chapel Bay Battery were mounted in the 6-inch battery in August 1918. In 1929 a 9.2-inch gun was mounted in the emplacement vacated in 1917.

A practice battery was built in the left flank of the 9.2-inch battery for quick fire guns and in 1935 two 12pdrs from South Hook Fort were mounted there and remained until dismounted in 1938. During the Second World War the two 6-inch guns were dismounted in June 1941 and sent to Lavernock Battery in the Bristol Channel defences. Two 12pdrs arrived early in 1941 and were mounted in the practice battery; the day after the two 12pdrs had gone another one arrived and was put in the practice battery. One twin 6pdr (possibly two) came to the battery and was to be mounted to the south of the 9.2-inch battery. The emplacement was not completed and the gun was withdrawn the following year. The guns were for training and practice only and did not form part of the approved armament. Finally in 1944 the battery was disarmed with the withdrawal of the 9.2-inch guns, the ammunition did not leave the site until 1947. In a gentle arc are the concrete positions for the 9.2-inch and 6-inch guns; the 9.2-inch battery can clearly be seen, the 6-inch positions have been filled in and masked by vegetation. The underground stores magazines and shelters have all been buried, also buried by vegetation are the engine room and BC Post. All the buildings associated with the site have gone with the exception of the caretaker's quarters. The battery remains the property of the Ministry of Defence although the coastal path skirts the gun positions.

More recent military installations nearby include gun and searchlight emplacements built in 1904 and during the Second World War and a disused LORAN wireless navigation station.

In front of the 9.2-inch battery is a small piece of stone wall, all that remains of the Tudor defences.

1852 Thorn Island Fort.

A Fort on Thorne Island was originally conceived by Colonel Bryce in 1817 as a six gun battery with a barracks in rear for 1 officer and 40 men. General Sir John Burgoyne recommended a Fort for the island mounting between 12 and 18 guns.

Some time between 1852 and 1858 the existing Fort was built, one source suggests that building commenced in 1854 and that is the date shown above the entrance to the fort. The Fort was built with a seaward facing battery for nine guns all firing en barbette with a single storey barracks in the rear at a lower level around a small parade ground; most of the barrack accommodation was for soldiers, the officers' accommodation was on the left flank. At roof level on the barracks there was a loopholed wall facing the mainland. The magazine was on the left flank just below the gun battery.

One of the last forts in Britain built specifically to combat wooden sailing vessels, it had a barbette battery of nine 68-pdr smooth bore muzzle loading guns and held a garrison of over 100 men. The defences were never put to the test and the fort had become obsolete by the end of the 19th century.

The battery was originally proposed to prevent an enemy making use of the anchorage at the mouth of the Haven. In 1872 it was decided that the proposed guns at west blockhouse and Thorne Island should be 80pr rifled muzzle loaders. In 1874, referring to the proposal to mount guns at Thorne Island it was decided 'Owing to the salient position and the wide lateral range required to bear on the channel from Stack Rock on the right, of East blockhouse Point on the left, these guns cannot be mounted in casemates. They should be mounted so as to obtain this great lateral range, and their number should be increased to four. Also considering the width of the channel opposite the island, the extensive range of these guns have seaward, and the increasing thickness of ship's armour, 11inch guns of 25tons should be provided instead of those hitherto proposed. Accordingly the Committee recommend that Thorne Island be remodelled for an armament of 4 x 11inch guns. Bearing in mind however the large number of guns already provided for Milford Haven they are of the opinion that the supply of the guns to Thorne Island may be postponed until more oppressing requirements at other places have been complied with.'

In 1886 it was decided that: no heavy defence is required in advance of Stack Rock and west blockhouse and Thorne Island should be disarmed.

In the early years of the twentieth century a searchlight position was built below the battery with a directing station above it on the parapet of the battery, These remain today. After the Fort was sold in 1932 it subsequently became an hotel and has been on the Market a number of times in recent years - in 1997 with an asking price of £250,000 and again in 2011 for £750,000. Thorn Island is privately owned, but the fort, which is now an hotel, may be easily viewed from the coast path.

Pembroke Dock Fortifications

1814 Royal Naval Dockyard Pembroke Dock

Protected by high walls and gun towers, the Naval Dockyard occupied an 80-acre site. Work on building the dockyard began in 1814 and by 1890 some 2,000 men were employed constructing ships for the Royal Navy. The Naval Dockyard closed in 1926, and remaining traces include the grey-stone buildings of The Terrace and the recently restored Avenue and Dockyard Chapel. The western end of the dockyard was until recently still occupied by the Royal Navy (I worked there as a shipwright) and here can be found a former oakum store, the pickling pond and a couple of slipways. The deep water Carr Jetty was built in 1898 and superseded Hobbs Point as the Quay for fitting out warships. The 12 foot high dockyard wall is still more or less complete, except for breaches to allow a railway line and, more recently, a new road to the Irish Ferry terminal. Inside the original dock gates is a mural depicting the badges of all the regiments which garrisoned the town for a century and a half.

It was originally intended that the Market Hall would be within the dockyard wall. When this plan was changed the wall had to be diverted around the Market, creating a blind spot which was not covered by the artillery in the two gun towers. Consequently this section of wall was fitted with musketry loopholes which are still visible. Outside the Dockyard, in Fort road, are the remains of the Admiralty gasworks dating from 1855. The nearby South Pembrokeshire Hospital was built as a Naval Hospital in 1902 and was extended by the RAF in World War II.

1813/ 1830 Pater Fort

1830 With the Dockyard moving to Pater in consideration was given to fortifying the area and in 1830 work was carried out at Pater Fort. It was garrisoned in 1831 but in 1836 it was dismantled. No record is available as to what armament was installed.

1840 Paterchurch Battery

Only a few pieces of the outer wall remain of the first battery and these are within the Dockyard walls

Paterchurch Battery was built by the Admiralty in 1840 - 42 on the western side of Pembroke Dockyard, on the site of a fort built during the Seven Years War. In 1856 the battery was taken over by the ordnance department and renovated from plans prepared by Lieutenant Charles Gordon (1833 - 1885), later General Gordon of Khartoum. This famous military figure was stationed in Pembroke Dock with the Royal Engineers in 1851, and sailed from the town that year for the War in the Crimea. Until 1855 it was only entered through a gateway via the Dockyard and in charge of a Naval Gunner. The last one was a Mr Turner.

It was used by the Royal Dockyard Battalion from 1847 to 1857 and in that year, on its being taken over by the Ordinance Department a gateway was made so as to allow entry to the Battery from outside the Dockyard wall.

In 1864 the Pembroke Dock Artillery Volunteers used it for gun drill and firing practise. The battery, which mounted 23 guns, was much used by the Pembroke Dock Artillery Volunteers for practice and drill. This volunteer movement was first started in the town in 1859 and the men wore a grey uniform. In 1860 its name was changed to the 2nd Pembrokeshire Rifle Volunteers, but two years later this name was altered to the Pembroke Dock Volunteer Artillery. The commanding officer was Captain Edgecumbe Chevalier who was eventually succeeded by Captain J Richardson. He held command for some years. The post of surgeon at that time was filled by a Dr Reynolds, and the sergeant majors were W H Lloyd and George Sloggett.

On July 10, 1861, a ceremonial silver bugle was presented to the Volunteers who also received a set of Colours - the imaginative and skilful work of some Pembroke Dock ladies. These Colours were later given to the Vicar of St Mary's Church, Pembroke, presumably after the regiment was disbanded outside the old Pater Battery in 1884.

In 1904 a new volunteer company, known as C Company, the 1st Volunteer Battalion, Welsh Regiment, was formed in Pembroke Dock, and some time later the silver bugle presented to the town's volunteer artillery back in 1861, was passed to the new company during an official parade.

The Battery was finally dismantled in 1902 when some of the stone was used for the erection of a new fitter's workshop and some for St Teilo's Church Llanion.

Traces of the defensive walls of the original fort can still be seen on the seaward side and the Resident Naval Officer's Office is the former soldiers' quarters.

Pater Battery Findley 1875

is situated at the north west extremity of the dockyard, which it adjoins and protects. It mounts twenty-three guns-among them being one breech loading Armstrong 112-pounder. It is a very neat and compact fortification, and is much used by Artillery Volunteers for gun-practice. It is occupied by the Royal Artillery

When the Pembroke Dockyard was built in 1813 the Royal Navy also built a gun battery in the north-western corner facing down the estuary; in the eighteen twenties the battery was transferred to the Board of Ordnance who consolidated the structure and closed the gorge with a wall and a defensible guardhouse. A bombproof magazine was built that could contain 272 barrels of powder. A report of 1844 noted that there were twenty-two 24 pdrs mounted but went to state that the guardhouse was uninhabitable due to a faulty roof and that the wall on the right flank had bulged and needed to be taken down and rebuilt.

In 1886 it was decided by the Defence Committee that the 4 x 32pr smooth bore guns should be removed and the 64pr rifled mussel loaders be retained for practice.

The battery was superseded when the other forts and batteries were built along the shores of the Milford Haven estuary; the armament steadily decreased until only eight guns remained for drill and practice. All the guns were withdrawn in 1901 and the next year the battery was dismantled and transferred to the Royal Navy who demolished most of it to construct a jetty.

Only a few pieces of the outer wall remain of the first battery of the Milford Haven defences today and these are within a secured area.

1850 Martello Towers

The Martello towers were built in 1850-1851; the contractors were 'Messrs. Joseph and Charles Rigby, London; chief-foreman, Mr. Stovall; under-foreman Mr. Noakes, father of Mr. Noakes, High Street. They were intended as a coast defence. One is situated off the Hard, Front Street, and the other opposite the Fort road. One to the South west, was designed to accommodate 1 x 32pounder + 4 x 12 pdr. brass howitzers and the other, by Front street 3 x 32 pdrs. These towers were formerly occupied by sergeants of the artillery and their families, but are now unoccupied and obsolete for military purposes.

1848 west "Martello" Tower

(The two were commonly called a Martello Towers but do not fit the general description which states that a Martello Tower – (stand up to 40 feet (12m) high (with two floors) and typically had a garrison of one officer and 15–25 men. Their round structure and thick walls of solid masonry made them resistant to Cannon fire, while their height made them an ideal platform for a single heavy piece, mounted on the flat roof and able to traverse, and hence fire over, a complete 360° circle.

Wikipedia))

A tower was proposed for the site by Colonel Bryce in 1817 so that it could cover the southern wall of the dockyard and protect the flank of Pater Battery. It was not until 1848 that construction started and it was well into the eighteen fifties before the Tower was armed. The Tower remained a defence work until 1881 when the Defence Committee decided that, as with the modern advanced works for the defence of the Haven they are no longer required.. and not calculated to resist the effects of modern artillery. Even before it was dismantled it was being used as married quarters and this no doubt continued until after World War I when it would have become unsuitable due to public health and sanitation requirements. Thereafter, the Tower was used as a store and navigation aid. The local Council purchased the Tower in 1974, did little or next to nothing with it then sold it in June 2000 to a private individual ostensibly for restoration. The Tower is situated on the foreshore at the western end of the south dockyard wall so that it can fire down the whole southern face of the wall; it can also cover the southern flank of Pater Battery and assist with fire down the estuary. The Tower is octagonal in shape with three sides facing down the Haven, and is four stories in height. In the basement is the magazine, stores area and a water Tank holding 4,550 gallons. The entrance is at first floor level with embrasures for five guns and accommodation for six men, immediately inside the entrance is the spiral staircase that leads to the basement, the second floor and the roof. The second floor has embrasures for five guns and accommodation for six men whilst on the roof there was a position for a 32pdr on a traversing carriage; at a lower level there was a loopholed parapet covering the entrance and the foreshore to the south.

The gun tower's main armament was a 32lb smooth bore Cannon mounted on a cast iron platform on the roof. Internally there were four bronze 12lb howitzers two on each floor - and also on each floor was a rack for 16 rifles. The fort was cleverly situated so that it not only guarded the Milford Haven approach to the dockyard, but on the landward side it commanded a field of fire along the entire length of the southern dockyard wall, from the sea to the Market Hall. With the Front Street gun tower commanding the eastern wall along Commercial Row, any enemy force attempting to attack the dockyard from the landward side would be raked with gunfire from the two forts. Both were obsolete for military purposes by the end of the 19th century, although in WWII, two Lewis light anti-aircraft machine guns were positioned on top of the tower.

1848 East "Martello" Tower

A tower defending the eastern end of the dockyard and able to cover the water in front of it, was proposed by Colonel Bryce in 1817; like its counterpart, the South west Tower, nothing was done until 1848 when construction work started and when it was completed in 1851 a number of years elapsed before it was armed. Its life as a defence work ceased in 1881 when it was dismantled for the same reasons as the South west Tower - obsolescence. The Tower continued in use as married accommodation, this probably ceased after the First World War because of increasing health housing and sanitation requirements. After use as a store the local Council purchased the Tower in 1974 eventually restored it and it is now the Gun Tower Museum operated by the Pembroke Dock Museum Trust. The Museum is well worth visiting as the whole of the Tower can be explored, the main floor is the actual museum with a wealth of information on the locality and on the defences of the Haven. On the roof a 32pdr has been mounted in one of the gun positions on a traversing carriage and slide.

From the seaward side the Tower appears to be three towers joined together, at the rear the entrance is recessed into a large alcove and covered by loopholes on either side and from above. The Tower is three stories in height with a basement containing stores, a magazine for 198 barrels of powder and a water Tank for 12,500 gallons. The ground floor (or upper floor) contains the main internal gun battery for the nine howitzers, divided into two rooms for the 17 man garrison, a room for the officer and the kitchen; immediately inside the entrance are two spiral staircases to the basement and the roof. On the roof are the three gun positions for the 32pdrs on traversing carriages firing en barbette whilst at the top of the spiral staircase is a covered loopholed musketry gallery protecting the entrance. In WWII, three Lewis light anti-aircraft machine guns were positioned on top of the tower to deal with low-flying enemy aircraft. The Gun Tower is now a museum and visitor centre, housing displays on the history of Pembroke Dockyard and on the fortifications of Milford Haven. On the roof is an 18-pounder smooth bore Cannon, cast in about 1812-16, which came from Popton Fort. It is still capable of being fired.

From the gun tower a sentry post can be seen on the dockyard wall. This sentry post was originally part of Paterchurch Fort and was probably moved to its present site in the 1840s.

1848 Defensible Barracks

The Pembroke Dockyard was founded in 1813 and was slowly provided with defences; to the south of the dockyard was a ridge that overlooked it and to guard against an attack from the south the ridge was to be occupied by a redoubt which became the Defensible Barracks. Construction took five years and subsequently it received its armament. In 1887 it was decided that the barracks may be disarmed. For most of its military existence it served as a barracks, a depot and a headquarters. When the forts and batteries protecting Milford Haven estuary were completed the defensive role of the barracks ceased and it was scheduled to be disarmed in 1886; thereafter such armament as was mounted there was for drill, practice and saluting, although in 1911 the Barracks is shown as having two machine guns on field carriages for the defence of the dockyard.

Superbly built in limestone to a classic, if outdated diamond-shaped design, the barracks came complete with a dry moat guarded by corner bastions. A drawbridge led over the moat and through an entrance arch in the gate-house. Inside the fort, the barrack square is flanked by four, two-storey terraces; it has been described as 'the finest Georgian style square in Wales'

From 1908 the Barracks became a drill centre for the local Territorial Forces, whilst in the First World War it was a Siege Training School for the Royal Artillerymen. The training role continued into the period in between the World Wars and into the Second World War. In 1942 17 servicemen killed on April 28, in an explosion at the Defensible Barracks during a mine disposal course. It was also the headquarters of the Milford Haven coastal batteries and this role continued until 1956 when the coast defences were abolished.

The Ministry of Defence sold the Barracks after 1956 to the South Pembrokeshire District Council who used it as a store and leased part of it to a local golf club that used it as a clubhouse. In 1987 it was sold to a developer, ostensibly for conversion into an hotel; by 2003 the Barracks were empty and derelict but appeared secure. In 2004 a feasibility study by the Prince's Regeneration

Trust offered several sustainable solutions to bring regenerative uses to this Grade II* Scheduled Ancient Monument. In 2006 the Barracks was owned by The Defensible Barracks 1844 Limited who have so far not agreed with the Pembrokeshire County Team a way to rescue and repair the structure which is deemed to be "At Risk".

The Barracks is a regular four sided work with a bastion at each corner, set within a deep dry ditch. Much of the enceinte is loopholed for musketry and the gun embrasures are concentrated at the salient of each bastion except for two embrasures on the eastern curtain. The entrance is over a drawbridge, through a loopholed gatehouse and onto the parade ground, around which are the barracks.

There is a basement where there were two powder magazines, above this there are two floors, the outer faces of which were loopholed for musketry to cover the rampart; on each face there is a turret that could provide flanking fire along each face. There is access from the parade ground to each of the bastions. Over the years various extra buildings had been built against the outer faces of the barracks or into the bastions.

This and the odd bullets, cap badges and tunic buttons, which are still occasionally washed to the surface by the Winter rains that lash the Barracks Hill, are all that remain to remind the golfer and stroller of a proud and distinguished past when practically every major regiment of the line was garrisoned at Pembroke Dock and the only thing I have ever seen in the moat was a goat keeping the brambles down.

1844 For the army garrison the Defensible Barracks was erected above the town work commenced in 1844 and the army took possession on 25th November 1848. This barracks was not designed to mount artillery but a Gun was fired daily at noon and at 9.30 pm from it. This needed, according to the original plans, a clear field of fire with no buildings encroaching on it surrounding the Barracks and the War department drew up proposals to clear all building to Llanreath at the west, to the stream of water running at the south and east of Cross Park, to the road at Tregennis Hill (all the houses built on the west side) and down to Victoria Rd on the north. Farmer Whites house and all the farm buildings were the first to be cleared as their lease had expired. All the other buildings were held on leases with unexpired portions and the tenants were asked to sell. It would appear that pressure was brought to bear on many of the tenants especially those who were working for the Admiralty and the houses were demolished. All the houses on the west side of Tregennis Hill, much of Cross Park including all those on the North side, and all Wesley Row including the Ebenezer Chapel.

The Defensible Barracks Findley

standing on the summit of a Hill overlooking the town, are always most conspicuous and striking objects. They are visible at a distance of, several miles. From their elevated position, they command the town- a large portion of which lies at the foot of the Hill, the harbour, and the country in all directions: they would in case of actual necessity be well adapted for purposes of defence. ,

They are strong and well-constructed buildings, occupying an area of 6,000 square yards." The outworks are strengthened by ramparts, loopholes, for small arms, and an entrenchment thirty feet wide and twenty feet deep. The outer boundary of the entrenchment was formerly unenclosed, which made it very unsafe for persons approaching it after night had set in; and during the first occupation of the defences by detachments of the Royal Marines-Plymouth Division-some twenty-eight or thirty years ago, several unfortunate members of that corps lost their lives through falling into it, as the grave-stones erected to their memory in the Old Burial Ground only too truly testify.

The barracks, occupying the centre of the works enclose a large quadrangular area and are reached by a drawbridge. The Royal Artillery has for many years occupied them. The armament at present consists of twenty four pounders(used only for firing salutes), likely shortly to be replaced by much heavier ordinance. From here a gun is fired morning and evening -- sunrise and sunset-daily Throughout the year, as is usual in most garrison towns."

1899 Quarters for married artillerymen were built on the east side of the Barracks on the site of some very old cottages.

1875 Pennar Torpedo Stores and Magazine near Pennar Point.

1875 A description by Findley in 1875 reads--Near the shore at Pennar Point (or Pennar Gut) are torpedo stores and magazines. Submarine Mining experiments have been carried on in connection with this station, and all appliances are kept there for Mining the Haven in case of need. At present these submarine Mining works belong to the War Department, and Royal Engineers are established there. But in the near future it is thought that the Admiralty will take over from the War Department all these works. These arrangements are understood to be part of a new scheme for the defence of Milford Haven, and will probably be developed on lines suggested in a recent Parliamentary statement made by the Right Hon., Arnold-Forster, Secretary of State for War. If this transfer should take place, it may eventually happen that a torpedo depot will be established in the neighbour Hood of Pennar Gut. This has, it is believed, been under consideration, and a part of the Pembroke river already been surveyed for this purpose. Much money has been expended on the various buildings in connection with this establishment at Pennar, the total cost approximately being £17,000.

Pennar Barracks

Royal Engineers Barracks were built here in 1903 in connection with a submarine Mining establishment at Pennar Point which had been in existence since about 1875.

The barracks complex comprised workshops, offices, mine stores, Quays, married quarters, barracks, a raised water Tank, ablutions blocks and various ancillary buildings.

Today the site accommodates a large housing development and only a small Quay and a Row of military fence posts remain to remind of its military and naval past. During WWII it was again used as a barracks and also housed RN coastal forces.

1850's The Hut Encampment Pembroke Dock

situated upon a acclivity on the north-east side of the town. It was formed about the time of the Crimean War. It consists of a large number of huts, built chiefly of wood, arranged in parallel lines - those of the officers standing separately from those of the non-commissioned officers and men and those devoted to hospital purposes from both.

A large stone-built residence for the doctor-formerly used as a hospital, a fine brick canteen, and a splendid gymnasium; besides schools, ball-court, etc. There is also a capital parade ground, with plenty of space for field, exercises, and a most capacious magazine for the storage of the War material necessary for the troops in this district.

Haven Garrison

1875 Findlay records

The Garrison comprises Artillery infantry of the line and forms part of the 24th Brigade depot'. The total number of men of all ranks, including those in charge of the forts down the Haven, is about 1,500, the larger portion of which occupies the Hut Encampment and the Defensible Barracks.

The need to garrison regular troops on a permanent basis did not arise until the establishment of the Admiralty dockyard at Pembroke in 1814. Originally the Yard was under the care of caretakers, then a small force under a naval lieutenant was formed.

Royal Marines

Eventually it was decided to protect the yard with a force of 500 Royal Marines. These men were to be accommodated in HMS Dragon, a hulk deliberately run ashore near the developing dockyard. This accommodation was used until the Defensible Barracks were opened. Work on Defensible, which overlooked the dockyard, had commenced in 1844 and possession was taken at 3 pm. on 25 November 1848. This was signalled to the spectators by the hoisting of the Union flag; meanwhile, the workmen who had been employed in the construction enjoyed a substantial dinner. When the barracks were ready for occupation the Marines, drawn from the Plymouth, Portsmouth and Woolwich Divisions gratefully moved in.

The Royal Dockyard Battalion

1847 Was a force of volunteers formed from the Dockyard employee's. It is believed that every man who was fit in the Yard, except for one, volunteered. It was raised in 1847 and consisted of eight companies of artillery and infantry combined and one company entitled the boat brigade. The salaried Yard Officers formed the Officers of the battalion and the instructors were professional soldiers, target practice and once a year a field exercise was held to which the general public were admitted. blank ammunition was used for these field exercises but there was the one occasion when a ramrod was fired off by mistake narrowly missing the Commanding Officer. There were comments that the man who fired should have been court-martialed for missing the target. Target practice by the infantry was much encouraged by setting apart certain afternoons during the summer months for the purpose. The place selected for the firing was Llanreath Point, just a little to the west of Mr. David Price's house. The target was fixed along the beach to the south. A good deal of rivalry existed between the companies which was fostered by the officers in giving prizes, and it was a remarkable fact that the company possessing the greatest number of shipwrights was the premier shooting company. The leaden bullet used at that time was five-eighth's of an inch in diameter.

1857 it was decided that the Royal Dockyard Battalions were no longer required, and with the exception of Malta, they were removed from the Army List.

After the Pembroke Dock Battalion were disbanded the Pater Volunteer Artillery Corps were reformed, and they continued to serve until 1861.

The Royal Dockyard battalions were never intended to be used as front line troops, their primary task was to defend the Dockyards, but in the event of invasion they were expected to assist the Coastal Defence Units. The Yard Officers appointed the non-commissioned Officers from among the volunteers. The uniform consisted of a blue frock coat and trousers, red facings, brass buttons and a spiked helmet. They drilled for two hours, twice a week and were paid sixpence an hour.

Regiments of the Line pre Crimea war

1850 the Royal Marines, who had formed the Pembroke Dock garrison since the first houses were built around the dockyard thirty-five years previously, were replaced by regiments of the line.

General Gordon, destined to die at Khartoum many years later, was a young Royal Engineer Lieutenant stationed at Pembroke Dock at the time of the outbreak of the Crimean War. It is said that when he received his posting to the Crimea, Gordon exclaimed: 'I have received my death warrant!' The 21st East Surrey Regiment was at Pembroke Dock when it, too, received orders to embark for the Crimea. Their departure was impressive; on a bitterly cold morning the East Surreys, led by their Commanding Officer, Colonel Slater, marched from the Barracks Hill to the dockyard steps. From there they were ferried out to the troopship Imperadore. After the soldiers had gone, collections were made in the town and dockyard in aid of the wives and children left behind. The Royal Monmouth Militia replaced them

Militiamen formed the Pembroke Dock Garrison for most of the time of the Crimea War, and from all accounts they were an ill disciplined lot. Many were billeted on the townspeople, who were pleased, when the war ended and the militiamen departed. The Royal Monmouth Militia had to March from Haverfordwest in a blizzard to Pembroke Dock and moved into the Defensible Barracks the same day that the East Surrey's left.

Regiments of the Line post Crimea war

1856 to 1861, regiments stationed at Pembroke Dock included the Monmouthshire Light Infantry and the Green-uniformed Montgomery Rifles.

1861 batteries of the 15th Brigade, considered to be an elite corps, arrived, to be followed by the 1865 62nd Wiltshire Regiment. This regiment had its own band; it played at the unveiling of the memorial to the Prince Consort on Castle Hill, Tenby, by HRH Prince Arthur, later Duke of Connaught.

1866 The Royal Warwickshire Regiment whose soldiers rendered valuable assistance when the original Bush House at Pembroke, seat of the Meyrick family, caught fire in 1866 succeeded the Wiltshires. Despite their heroism and that of others, the stately building was destroyed although much of the contents were saved.

1871 The 103rd Foot, also known as the Bombay Fusiliers, occupied part of Defensible in 1871

1873 The 1st Battalion of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers whose Commanding Officer was a Colonel Prevost. Even in a town used to the pomp and splendour of the Victorian military, this regiment attracted considerable attention, not least because of the handsome goat that invariably led ceremonial parades.

The 'Holy Boys' of the 9th east Norfolk Regiment followed the Fusiliers. Their fine band under its dashing Italian Bandmaster, Signor Bonicoli, a member of the Regiment, created a big impression.

95th Derbyshire,

54th Dorsetshire and

41st Welch Regiments, the last-named commanded by Sir Hugh Rowland, VC It, too, had a goat as its mascot.

1877 The 36th Worcester Regiment was in residence at Defensible from 1877 to 1879. Its soldiers were the last in Pembroke Dock to have a Green facing on their uniforms and to wear the old shako-style headdress. The Regiment was also the last to attend services in the Royal Dockyard Chapel. For some unknown reason Dr Ring, the Dockyard Chaplain had objected to the presence of troops in the Chapel. The military took offence and ever thereafter attended Divine Service in the Parish Church of St. John.

1880 a hutted encampment was created to lodge an overflow of men from Defensible. This was on land overlooking the present Pier road at Pembroke Dock, just below the future site of Llanion Barracks whose building was due to begin in 1889. One of the encampment's first occupants was the 2nd Battalion, 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, whose Commanding Officer was Colonel Luke O'Connor, V.C.

While the Fusiliers were at Pembroke Dock, a detachment of the Royal Marine Artillery was also stationed there, quartered in the hospital ship Nankin. This was the time of the Fenian scare and the Marines were brought in from Portsmouth to add weight to the police protection of the dockyard, taking sentinel duty on the yard's boundary walls.

Throughout the Boer Campaign Pembroke Dock was overflowing with troops for, in addition to the Royal Northern Reserve Regiment, stationed there, the town also accommodated Number 1 Company of the Royal Garrison Artillery, the 35th Royal Engineers, and a section of the Royal Pembrokehire Militia. They all did garrison duty until the New Year of 1903. Many of the men in the Royal Northern Reserve Regiment were time-expired veterans who had fought Throughout the Empire in Queen Victoria's 'Little Wars'; they wore a string of campaign medals with great pride.

1903 One of the most famous regiments in the British Army, the King's Shropshire Light Infantry, commanded by Colonel Bulman, DSO, arrived in March 1903 from Poonah, India, and there were mixed fortunes for the men in respect of accommodation. Some were lucky enough to move into a block of the half-completed Llanion Barracks, but the majority was quartered in the old hut encampment. (There is a war memorial to the men of the KSLIs killed during WW1 in St Johns Church Lady Chapel Pembroke Dock)

1899 Llanion Barracks

Although condemned some nine years earlier by the Duke of Cambridge, then Commander-in-Chief of the British Army, the huts had remained in use and the decision was made to extend their life until the new barracks, able to accommodate two battalions, was ready. Building commenced in 1899 and was completed in 1906. There were a number of innovations, not least a commodious mess Hall for the soldiers. At Defensible and the hut encampment, they had slept and eaten in the same barrack-room, a practice that had been common Throughout the British Army until the modernisation of barracks and the construction of new ones like Llanion. The new messing arrangements, therefore, were warmly welcomed. Each barrack-block had a veranda so that the men could sit and chat in the open air, and the large gymnasium could also be used for concerts, balls and other entertainments. Houses were built for married personnel who wished to bring their families to Pembroke Dock.

The opening of Llanion Barracks signalled the gradual demise of the sixty-year-old fort at Defensible. It had served its purpose well, quartering Throughout Victoria's reign many thousands of troops in defence of the Royal Dockyard. It would never again be the principal source of accommodation for regiments garrisoned at Pembroke Dock, although right up to the early 1950s it continued to be occupied from time to time by various small units of the regular army, and local territorial's.

Milford Haven Town

1790 Sir William Hamilton, a local landowner, whose first wife was a Barlow, obtained permission from Parliament to establish a Market and port close to the old settlements of Hubberston and Pill.

So Milford was born, built largely through the initiative of Sir William's agent Charles Greville. In the early days the commercial growth of the port was connected with the sperm-oil industry, run by a group of Quaker whalers from Nantucket.

There was also a Naval Shipyard here, but this moved to Pembroke Dock in 1814 and Milford never developed as a successful port in its own right. The docks were not completed till 1888, but during the early part of this century Milford was one of Britain's main fishing ports.

After years of stagnation the town received a great boost with the coming of the oil industry in the late 1950's and 1960's. With oil refineries dominate the skyline and jetties dominate the waterway. The town itself is pleasant and airy, carefully planned (as befits a "new town") with three parallel main Streets and with large housing areas across the pill in the Hubberston-Hakin area.

St. Katherine's Church (1808) is devoid of charm, but far more interesting is the little fisherman's Chapel accessible from The Rath - this may be one of the oldest religious buildings in Pembrokeshire.

In Hakin there is a ruined Observatory but the most interesting local building is Hubberston Fort (one of "Palmerston's Follies") next to the Conservancy Board HQ.

1811 Fenton Tour Milford Haven

[Fenton, Tours was published in 1811 but the dedication was written earlier so it is probable that he recorded his description of Milford about 1809 as he visited Milford at that time. He lived near Fishguard (approximately 20 miles away as the crow flies) and would therefore have known the people involved and been able to record and leave us a picture of the progress at the time]

‘The late Sir William Hamilton, (He died in 1803 and his Welsh estates were heavily mortgaged) his majesty's minister at the court of Naples, Lord of the manors of Hubberston and Pill and proprietor of several large farms adjoining the village of Hubberston in the year 1784 happened to be on the spot with his nephew the Right Hon. Charles Greville, as a mark of his early and uniform regard, and a pledge for his ultimate disposal of his property, gave the lands in the said manors exclusively to his direction, with powers to grant leases and make such other measures as might best contribute to making them productive and answer the purpose of any plan he might have in view, or his active talents might lead him to think them applicable to.

It was then agreed that an application should be made to Parliament to obtain the requisite objects for a commercial town and an occasional source of the royal navy. “An Act was passed accordingly in 1790, and the powers granted by it enabled Sir William Hamilton, his heirs and assigns, to set out legal Quays, establish Markets, make docks at the east and west limits of Pill farms in the parish of Stainton; to make roads and avenues to the same and to regulate the police of the said port and Markets, and thereby enable the mails to go regularly to Waterford from Milford”, for at that time the post stopped at Haverfordwest, eight miles from the resort of shipping, and little or no commercial intercourse or means of trade between Milford and any other place existed.

The sole guardianship of the infant establishment was thus vested in Mr Greville, Sir William Hamilton only contributing what he thought fit towards its maintenance, without risk or speculation; and Mr Greville thus limited in means, employed them with system and economy for the advancement of his new town, by giving effect to its natural advantages, and providing artificial inducements for industry to exert itself in so favourable a spot.

A capital inn or large hotel suggested itself as the first thing necessary, and was immediately erected to accommodate the mail coaches and packets, whose passengers supplied it with customers. A town was then planned, and the ground laid out in regular allotments, which were eagerly applied for and built on, so that in a very few years such was its progressive enlargement, that something more than the skeletons of Streets met the eye where now some handsome public and private buildings occur, and the whole begins to assume an air of neatness and consequence; increasing population begot a Market and an accession of trade a custom house; nor was Mr Greville inattentive to anything that might conduce to the convenience, the protection of ornament of the new town of Milford or of the Haven in general.

The lessee and the Trinity house were induced to give safety to the coast and the entrance of Milford and empowered Mr Greville to execute Captain Huddart's plans and new position of the lights, so that Milford Haven can now be approached with perfect safety by day and by night, and the late instance of a frigate being lost there through absolute ignorance cannot be adduced as proof to the contrary, or in disparagement of that noble harbour.

To make docks here equal in are of water to the London docks requires only embankment and deepening, the present depth at the entrance to the Pill giving twenty feet and loaded lighters navigating in its present unimproved state to its upper extremity; but it cannot be expected that the heavy expense of competent warehouses and docks can be undertaken until Milford in addition to the ancient preference of being one of the warehousing ports enumerated in all former acts, is licensed to enjoy the benefit of the last act(in which it happens not to be mentioned) by having its name particularly inserted, so as to entitle it to the latest encouragements.

Lord Spencer's plan of a dockyard for constructing King's ships at Milford has tended greatly to aid the navigation of these seas, for till then no place even to repair coasting vessels was known there, and the nominal existence of agents, consuls, &c. only served to heighten the disappointment in this dockyard (Tours 214/757)

1839 Milford -Lewis Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Milford a sea-port and Market-town, in the parish of Steynton, union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles (N. W.) from Pembroke, 8 (S. S. W.) from Haverfordwest, and 256 (W.) from London; containing 1640 inhabitants, but, with Old Milford adjoining, in Hubberston parish, 2377. This place, which is celebrated for the magnificent Haven to which it gives name, is said to have derived its appellation from a stream that turned a mill anciently belonging to a priory, about a mile from the present town, and over which there was a Ford, previously to the erection of a bridge here. It was in the famous Haven of Milford that Henry II. embarked with the troops he had assembled for the conquest of Ireland; and here also he landed on his return from that expedition. In the reign of Henry IV., an army of 12,000 men, that had been sent from France to the assistance of Owain Glyndwr in his insurrection against the authority of that Monarch, landed at this place, from which they marched to the siege of Haverfordwest, and, subsequently, to that of Carmarthen. The Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., attended with a small body of French retainers, ill-disciplined, and scantily provided for the great design he had undertaken, also landed in this Haven, where he was received by Rhÿs ab Thomas, with a numerous train of dependents and followers, whose warlike appearance encouraged him at once to proceed on his arduous enterprise. On this occasion it is said that Rhÿs, who had previously, in his assurances of loyalty to Richard, declared that any person ill-affected to the state, daring to land in those parts of Wales where he had any employment under the King, "must resolve to make his entrance and irruption over his belly," evasively laid himself on his back on the ground, that the earl, on landing, might pass over him: a tradition still popular in the neighbourhood states that Rhÿs remained under a small bridge, while the earl passed over it. Immediately after his landing, Richmond, having despatched orders to his partisans in other parts of the country, to join him with their forces at Shrewsbury, set forward upon his March, forming his small army into two divisions, one of which he commanded himself, taking his route through Cardiganshire, and the other he placed under the conduct of Rhÿs, who, passing through Carmarthenshire, was to collect his followers on his March, and to rejoin the earl at Shrewsbury.

In the time of Henry VIII., although the present town of Milford was not then in existence, the port of Llanelly, in Carmarthenshire, was esteemed a creek to the harbour. In the reign of Elizabeth, when the country was threatened with the Spanish invasion, an engineer named Ivy was sent hither, to survey the Haven, and report on the means necessary to be adopted for its defence against the enemy; but his conduct gave so much dissatisfaction to the inhabitants of this part of the coast, that a spirited memorial was drawn up by the Bishop of St Davids and the principal gentry and magistrates of the county, and presented to the leading members of the Privy Council. This memorial set forth the great importance to "her Majesty and the realm," of properly and effectually fortifying the Haven of Milford and entreated that some engineer of experience should be sent down for that purpose. In consequence either of this remonstrance, or of Ivy's report of the means necessary for the defence of the place, orders were issued for the erection of two forts near the entrance of the Haven, which were begun in situations very ill chosen for the purpose, and were never finished. Their remains, called respectively the Dale and Angle blockhouses, are still visible. About the commencement of the American war, it was resolved by the government to form a dockyard at Neyland, in Llanstadwell parish, on the northern shore of the Haven, and a little to the east of the present town; and some land in the vicinity was purchased for the erection of forts and batteries for its defence; but, after two ships had been built there by contract, viz., the Milford frigate, and the Prince of Wales of seventy-four guns, and when one of the fortifications had been constructed to a considerable extent, the design was abandoned: nearly £20,000 had been expended. After the battle of the Nile, Admiral Nelson visited Milford in company with Sir William Hamilton, then proprietor of it: that great commander regarded the Haven as the finest harbour in the known world, capable of floating more than the whole navy of England within its limits in perfect safety. George IV., on his return from Dublin in 1821, encountering a gale of wind near the Land's End, the royal squadron twice entered the Haven; and ultimately his Majesty landed at Milford and proceeded hence by land to London. In commemoration of this event, a tablet, about six feet in height, ornamented in the centre with a large shell, and with wreaths of flowers down the sides, was placed at the end of a public building near Milford Quay; on which tablet is engraved a long inscription detailing the circumstances of the occurrence.

The Town is of very recent date, owing its rise and importance to the Hon. Mr. Greville, nephew of Sir William Hamilton, and, after the death of his uncle, proprietor of the estate. This gentleman, during the lifetime of Sir William, perceiving the advantages that might be derived from the situation of the property, procured an Act of Parliament in 1790, enabling Sir William Hamilton, his heirs and assigns, to make docks, construct Quays, establish Markets, with roads and avenues to the port, to regulate the police, and make the place a station for conveying the Waterford mails, which previously had been compelled to stop at Haverfordwest, eight miles distant from the place of shipping. To this arrangement may be attributed the origin of the town, which it was resolved to build opposite to the finest anchorage in that part of the Haven called the Man-of-war roads. The first building erected was a large and commodious inn, for the accommodation of the passengers by the mail coaches and packets; and a ground plan having been regularly laid out, the allotments were eagerly taken and built upon, and a flourishing town soon arose. The earliest settlers in the new town were some families from the island of Nantucket, on the coast of North America, of whom the Starbucks first, and subsequently the family of Rotch, came by invitation of government to establish the South Sea whale fishery here: this trade was carried on successfully for some years, but was afterwards entirely discontinued. The increased population soon caused the establishment of a Market, for which a good house has been built, and which is well and cheaply supplied for the inhabitants and the shipping, this having been formerly a station for men-of-war. In 1823 a custom-house was erected, to which that of Pembroke became subordinate.

A very great addition to the prosperity of the town was made by carrying into effect Lord Spencer's plan for establishing a royal dockyard, which occurred about the commencement of the present century, when a frigate of forty guns, and a sloop of thirty, were built here, proving to be the best ships of their respective classes in the service. In 1809, the Milford of seventy-four guns was launched; and in consequence of the design of government to fix the new dockyard and naval arsenal here, a petition was presented to the House of Commons, in 1813, for leave to bring in a bill for the improvement of the town, by building a bridge across one of the inlets of the Haven to the village of Hakin, to be constructed in such a manner as to convert the inlet into a floating-dock of sixty acres. Under these favourable circumstances the town, which had already become considerable in its extent and population, promised greatly to increase in importance; but its further progress was arrested by the removal of the royal yard and arsenal to Paterchurch, now Pembroke Dock, in 1814. It still, however, retained its distinction as the station for the post-office packets to Waterford; but this, also, it afterwards lost by the removal of the establishment to Hobbs' Point, near Pembroke Dock, where a handsome pier was built.

Milford occupies a beautiful situation, five or six miles from the mouth of the Haven, on a point of land sloping down to the water, by which it is almost surrounded. It is bounded on the east by Prix Pill, on the west by Priory Pill, and on the south by the main Haven, which here expands into a spacious reach, having the appearance of a large inland lake, enclosed by rocky shores presenting rich and highly varied scenery. The town is elevated upwards of sixty feet above the level of the sea, and consists of three parallel Streets, intersected at right Angles by others leading down to the Haven: the lower street contains only one row of houses, overlooking the water, and having in front a fine terrace, at one extremity of which stands the principal hotel, a large pile of building. The houses, which are for the most part of stone procured on the spot, are regularly disposed, and many of them of very good design. Since the removal of the dockyard and packet-station, numbers of excellent houses have been untenanted. The approach to the town from the sea is defended by two batteries, mounting each seven guns, and erected on the opposite shores of the Haven; and between the adjacent villages of Hakin and Hubberston is an observatory, which, however, having never been finished, is now going to decay. The air is remarkably salubrious; the surrounding scenery abounds with variety, and in some places is highly picturesque.

Milford Haven is one of the most extensive and secure harbours in the world. It is formed by the junction of the rivers called the Eastern and western Cleddy, from the mouths of which it extends nearly ten miles in length, being from one to two miles in breadth, and having five bays, ten creeks, and thirteen roadsteads; the whole affording good anchorage and shelter for ships of the greatest burthen, which, from the strength and depth of the tides, can put out to sea in any winds with more expedition than from any other large harbour on the coast of Britain. Its total navigable length, from its mouth, up the main Haven and the western Cleddy, to Haverfordwest, is twenty-one miles; from its mouth, ascending the Haven and the Eastern Cleddy, to Canaston bridge, about twenty miles. It has been stated, by a naval officer once resident at the place, to be capable of receiving, at one time, 1000 ships of the line, and the same number of fifty-gun ships, of frigates, of sloops of war, and of transports, without the least danger of their being in each other's way; and that 100 sail of the line might be brought to act simultaneously against any ships, however numerous, that might attempt to enter the harbour.

The Trade of the town arises from its being a great resort of shipping, not only on account of the custom-house, but also of the quarantine establishment, and the convenience of its situation as a port for vessels in distress and under circumstances of peculiar destination. The principal business is shipbuilding, which, notwithstanding the removal of the royal dock-yard, is still carried on: there are several yards for repairing vessels, in which also vessels of upwards of 100 tons' burthen are built; likewise a dry-dock, 163 feet Long by 54 broad, formed by Mr. Hogan, ship-builder, and of which the foundation stone was laid in April 1844. American timber is imported for ship-building and domestic uses, and also various articles of Baltic produce, but upon a small Scale. The principal exports are, stone-coal (for drying malt), of which great quantities are shipped for London, and different ports on the Bristol and English Channels; and limestone and culm, sent coast wise. Steam communication is maintained with Bristol, Liverpool, and other places. A large oyster fishery is carried on for the supply of distant Markets, the oysters of this coast being esteemed unrivalled in quality. The jurisdiction of the port extends over the whole Haven, and along the coast from near Laugharne, in Carmarthenshire, to St Davids Head; the number of vessels of above fifty tons registered at the port, amounts to sixty-nine, with an aggregate burthen of 7337 tons. Some good Quays have been constructed; there are large warehouses for bonding stores, and two bonding-yards for timber. The custom-house is a neat and substantial building, commodiously situated, and well adapted to its purpose; and here is now the establishment belonging to the lighthouse upon the "Smalls," having been transferred of late years from Solva. A brewery is conducted upon an extensive scale; and a considerable trade is carried on in ship-chandlery and other articles necessary for the supply of shipping. The Market days are Tuesday and Saturday, and the Markets, which are numerous attended, are held in a convenient and sheltered area.

By the Act of Parliament passed in 1832 for "Amending the Representation," Milford was made a contributory borough with Pembroke, &c., in returning a member to parliament. The constituency consists entirely of the ten-pound householders, duly qualified and registered; and the number of houses of sufficient value to qualify their tenants is about 250, the limits marked out for the franchise not only including the whole area between Pilsen and Priory Pill, chiefly occupied by the town, but also the old village of Hakin, in Hubberston parish, on the opposite side of the latter inlet. The Lord of the manor holds courts leet, at which constables and other officers are appointed. Milford forms a Chapelry, the living of which is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Hon. Robert Fulke Greville; income, £80. The Chapel, dedicated to St. Catherine, is situated at the eastern extremity of the street fronting the Haven; it was erected chiefly at the expense of the Hon. Charles Francis Greville, then Lord of the manor, and was consecrated for divine service in the year 1808. It is an elegant structure in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty embattled tower, and consists of a nave, chancel, and north and south aisles. The roof is richly groined, and the windows are embellished with stained glass: the font, which is of very chaste design, is of Derbyshire marble, and opposite to it is a vase of red porphyry, brought from Egypt, and intended to be placed here; also the top-gallant mast of the French ship L'Orient, that was blown up in the battle of Aboukir. A little to the east of the present edifice are the remains of an ancient Chapel, which was also dedicated to St. Catherine, and, after having been desecrated for many years, was converted into a powder magazine. It consisted of a nave and chancel, with a finely vaulted roof, which is still entire; the western end has fallen down, but the boundaries of the old cemetery may be distinctly traced. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists; and some schools. Milford gives the title of Baron to the Philipps family, Sir R. B. Philipps, Bart., having been raised to the dignity in 1847: a former barony of Milford in the same family, became extinct in 1823.

[Would not encourage visitors – Hotel In Neyland is described as “good” – Lord Nelson no recommendation]

Milford road Station from which Milford is 3 miles. A branch line is being constructed to it. (Hotel Lord Nelson). Milford is splendidly situated on the right side of the Haven about 6 miles its mouth between two small creeks opposite an anchorage called the Man of War road. It was entirely the creation of Hon. C F Grenville who inherited the property from his uncle Sir William Hamilton, the British Envoy at the court of Naples and the portion that is finished consists of 3 parallel Streets ranged along the hillside, commanding fine views of the harbour. It has been now for years a dull desolate place extinguished by the removal of the Royal Dockyard in 1811, followed by that of the Irish Post Office and packet establishment, by which trade was reduced to stagnation and many houses shut up.

A brighter future, however, is dawning upon it; the unequalled capabilities of the Haven are again being recognised.

A well appointed service of Irish as well as Brazilian steamers has been started from the terminus of the South Wales Railway, and a short time will see the great chain of railway communication completed between Manchester and the northern manufacturing districts, a few short links only being wanted.

1913 South Wales – Milford Haven acc. to Wade

Milford Haven, a town and fishing port in Pembrokeshire at the mouth of a small creek that runs inland on the North side of the Haven that gives the place its name.

Population 6,399.

The town is of comparatively recent origin, having been laid out about 1793, the neighbouring suburb of Hakin, on the other bank of the creek being older.

In the early part of the 19th century, it did a good deal of shipbuilding for the navy; but the naval dockyard was removed to Pembroke in 1814, and it now depends principally upon fishing. The industry is of considerable importance; nearly 100 steam trawlers belong to the port and numerous other craft make it their headquarters during the season. The docks are well furnished with all the necessary appliances for preserving, curing and distributing the fish taken.

The town commands a fine view of the Haven and the main street, which is open to the sea, is furnished with seats. At one end of the esplanade thus formed is the parish Church, a modern structure, which contains a memorial of Nelson in the shape of the truck of the French man of war "L Orient" which blew up at the Battle of the Nile. It was presented to the Church by Lady Hamilton. Near it is a porphyry urn got from Egypt and intended for a font. Sir William Hamilton owned considerable property in and around Milford and Nelson visited the place in his company in 1801.

In a field behind the Church are the remains of St Catherine's Chapel and at Pill (called by Leyland Pille Rose) about a mile from the town, is a solitary chancel arch – all that is left of what was once the Church of a Benedictine priory following the rule of St Bernard of Tiron, and founded by Adam de Rupe, the builder of Roch Castle.

Milford Haven Acc/to Pembrokeshire notes.

The author of the Life of St Brynach (12c) tells how the Lord God conveyed his saint the length of the British sea and landed him in the Haven of Milford in the region of Dyfed on the banks of the river Cleddy.

The facts are as follows. Milford is quite a modern town and has no Welsh name other than Milffwrt. as Mr Laws puts it (History of Little England 1888 p 400) "By very many persons it is supposed that Milford Haven takes its name from Milford town, but the great estuary was christened a thousand years ago while the town came into being during the last quarter of the 18c. He then tells the story of the marriage of Miss Barlow of Colby to Sir William Hamilton by which the latter obtained possession of the manors of Pill and Hubberston; how in 1784 Hamilton (two years after the death of his wife) visited Pembrokeshire with his nephew the Hon. Charles Grenville, who immediately saw "money" in Milford Haven. how Hamilton met "the lovely Emma" a domestic in Greville's house in Paddington Green, and became infatuated with her; how Emma was sold to him for £6000 by the honourable gentleman, who now took over and began to lay out his "new" town, that is Milford; and how in 1802 a queer quartet assembled at Milford; Charles Grenville, Sir William Hamilton, Lord Nelson and Emma by now Lady Hamilton. Acc/to Western Telegraph Then & Now Wed July 10 1991.

Nelson and the Hamiltons were at that time living in the famous "Ménage de Trios" at Merton Place near Wimbledon. Nelson and Emma were lovers something which Sir William seemed to accept. Charles Francis Greville Sir William's nephew and heir who had been Emma's lover before he introduced her to Sir William was managing the Hamilton Pembrokeshire estates for his uncle.

Sir William had voiced concern over Greville's reported financial excesses in developing the new town of Milford and had been invited down by Greville to see for himself. The three left Merton on July 21st 1802 and arrived at Milford on July 31st Nelson was fêted all the way. They were greeted at Milford by Greville and a flag waving throng at the "New Inn". Front St renamed two days later the "Lord Nelson".

As the next day was the fourth anniversary of Nelson's victory at the Nile, Greville arranged a few days' celebrations including a sumptuous banquet at the New Inn attended by all the leaders of west Wales society. It was here that Nelson made his speech in praise of the Milford Haven Waterway and those involved with its development.

They then visited Lord Milford at Picton near the home of the Barlow's at Slebech where Sir William's first wife Catherine Barlow had been buried

Haverfordwest was the next stop where they stayed in Foley House with Captain Foley a naval colleague. He and Nelson were granted the freedom of the borough on the next day (Aug 7th). Aug 10th 1802 they visited Lord Cawder at Stackpole Court then Tenby before returning to Merton via Birmingham which they reached on September 5th 1802.

Sir William Hamilton died, in the arms of Emma on 19th April 1803 and is buried alongside his first wife Catherine in the old Church at Slebech.

Milford Haven - Mrs Mary Mirehouse.

Sir William Hamilton, Ambassador at Naples, grandson of the third Duke of Hamilton, married in 1758 Catherine, daughter of John Barlow of Slebech (she died 1782). through her he acquired property at Milford Haven, for which his nephew, the Hon. Charles Greville, son of the Earl of Warwick, acted as agent. Charles Greville had taken up a very lovely girl, Emma Hart, whom Sir William much admired, calling her 'the Fair tea-maker' when they met at Greville's house.

started great schemes at Milford planned docks, and built a large pier; he was soon overwhelmed with debt, and then made a shameful bargain with Sir William, the result of which was that Emma was enticed to Naples, on the pretext of Masters for her beautiful voice and there fell into Sir William's hands. After five years they returned to England, and were there married on September 6, 1791 Milford was transferred to Greville, with a settlement of £800 per annum on the bride.

In 1800 the Government rented the Milford Shipbuilding Yard for fourteen years, and Greville, Sir William and Lady Hamilton, and Lord Nelson all met at a banquet given at the Lord Nelson Hotel at Milford by Greville; apparently without any awkwardness being felt by anyone. Charles Greville died in 1809, leaving the Milford property to his brother Robert. In 1814 the Government lease ran out, and was not renewed, the money demanded being too extortionate. From that time the fortunes of Milford declined, and untold sums were sunk and lost in the effort to revive them, both by Robert Greville and his son, also Robert. The latter finally quitted the place, his only son having been thrown from his horse and killed in Hyde Park.

The Government in 1814 began to build the present dockyard on the site then known as Pater-Church (still spoken of by country people as Pater, pronounced Patter), the Haven Forts were afterwards built for its protection.

Emma Lady Hamilton's career with Lord Nelson is a matter of history; there is a beautiful portrait of her by Romney at Stackpole Court.

Pilla or Pille Priory

Acc/to The monastic Order in South Wales 1066 -1348 F G Cowley

Pille Priory was founded by Neva mother of Robert Fitz Martin between 1113 and 1115 and with

Caldy were attached to St Dogmael's

Near Herbranston in the parish of Stainton founded by Adam de Rupe or de la Roche endowed by him with considerable possessions in the territory of Roos.

Dedicated to St Mary and St Budoc at first established for the monks of the Order of Tyrone who later forsook the strict rule and became common Benedictines.

The assessed value given for Pill in 1291 was £24 4 11d but this raises the question of whether it was actually subordinate to St Dogmael's.

Although some authorities (Speed and Reyner) say it was subordinate to St Dogmael's this was unlikely as in 26th Henry VIII it was credited with having distinct revenues of its own to the value of £67 15s 3d per annum total and £52 2s 5d clear.

Fenton is incorrect on his statement about the disposal of the property at the dissolution.

1922 The Benedictine Priory of Pill or Pull RCAM

Within a few years of the foundation of the Benedictine Priory of St Dogmael's by Nicholas de Turribus which took place about the year 1100, that house had established two subordinate houses, one on the island of Caldey and the other on the banks of one of the small inlets of Milford Haven called Hubberston Pill. Modern rearrangements of early landmarks have removed the site of the Monastery from the parish of Hubberston (itself probably an early break-off from Steynton) and brought it within the limits of the civil parish of Milford.

Remains Pill Priory RCAM 1922

The founder of the priory of pill was Adam de Rupe and the house was dedicated to St Budoc and the blessed Virgin.

At the visitation of the rural deanery of Cemes in July 1504, the prior of Pill, as Rector was reported to have repaired the ruined chancel of Pill, and that it was in good order; and in the visitation of Roose, held in the chapter house of pill Priory on the 10th September following, Dom David says he has five monks all obedient to him, that the Monastery was not in debt, and that he had sufficient means to keep it up.

The priory, though quite insignificant in size, was planned after the regular monastic model; a quadrangle, with the various buildings ranged round its four sides; but it must have presented the appearance of a Monastery in miniature. The existing remains consist only of the walls of the Church at the crossing of the chancel and transepts – the east wall of the nave has fallen. The ground upon which the rest of the building stood is occupied by a number of cottages in which every feature of the monastic buildings has been lost. The single detail left is the well proportioned chancel arch and this is tottering to its fall. The illustration of a drawing by Mr Charles Norris shows the body of the Church had been completely removed prior to the commencement of the 19th century, but that the chancel and transepts were not then so ruinous as they have since become. The present interest of the ruins is, indeed, not so much architectural as historical.

Note – Though there can be no doubt of the relationship that existed between the house of St Dogmael's and the establishments of Caldy and Pill – that of mother and daughter Monasteries – there can also be no doubt that the bonds between them, so far at any rate as Pill is concerned, were confined solely to the payment of a small annual pension to the parent Monastery. Pill had its own Independent churches, issued its own charters and granted its own leases, and was regarded at the Dissolution as the direct possessor of its own revenues.

Priory Of St Budoc And The blessed Virgin

Priory of the Order of Tiron, dedicated to St Budoc and the blessed Virgin: thought to have been founded in the 12th century, possibly as early as about 1113, or as late as 1200; dissolved 1536. The remains of the Priory are set on generally level ground at the junction of two valleys , at the head of Hubberston Pill: recording & survey work, 1996 & 1999, have provided a reasonably clear outline of the Priory, which centred on a cruciform Church, at least 40m east to west overall, comprising an aisle less nave & chancel, north & south transepts & a central crossing tower, with claustral buildings on the south & burials recorded on the north: the visible remains comprise the chancel arch & broken north transept arch, with elements of the central crossing tower above: the modern residence & public house, 'the Steps' & Priory Inn incorporate parts of the eastern cloister range in their fabric, 'the Steps' being thought to be based on the Priory chapter house: a pond bay to the north has been associated with the medieval Priory.

1811 A Historical Tour through Pembrokeshire –Richard Fenton Pill Priory

“About a mile further , after resuming the main road, I leave a newly erected mansion to my left, built on the site of the old Chapel of St Buddock by Mr Le Hunt, a gentleman of Ireland who since the troubles in his country has resided in Pembrokeshire, where he possesses a valuable property inherited from an ancestor of his in the time of Charles I who married a heiress of this county, though none of it lies in the neighbourhood of his residence.”

“Descending into a little valley at the extremity of Hubberston Pill near a mile from the estuary , where you suddenly fall in the small remains of Pill Priory; there is little more standing than the east side of part of the tower wall, yet enough to inform us that the building was cruciform, the tower in the centre forming the choir supported on arches, one of which remains entire , a little pointed but very plain and rude without the least trace of sculptured ornaments any where. Yet this principal fragment , together with the lesser ones scattered round the cottages among the ruins, and the mill backed by the prettily wooded Hill of Ledelmston , groups into not unpleasant landscape. This religious establishment owed its foundation to Adam de Rupe or de la Roche , who appeared at that time to have vast power and possessions in this part of the country particularly at that time, so he endows it with lands in different parts of the territory of Roos, and advowsons of all the churches within the pale of his new conquest that appears to have extended so far as to include the more distant churches of New moat and Little New Castle situated among the mountains of Pembrokeshire.”

“It was said to be subordinate to the abbey of St Dogmael's yet was found in the 26th of Henry the Eighth to have distinct revenues to the value of sixty-seven pounds fifteen shillings and three pence per annum”

“ A few years ago , in digging a garden adjoining the ruins of the priory Church, the workmen fell upon a spot that had been the burying place of the Monastery, and uncovered several grave-stones; one of which broken in two I have seen with an inscription round the rim in flowery characters in a gentleman's yard in the town of Milford and though I was presented with a fax simile when the letters were much more perfect than they now are , the stone in many places having ex-foliated by being exposed to the air after its subterraneous imprisonment, they were too much effaced to be correctly made out, yet there was enough left to prove it the grave stone of one of the early priors of the house”

“With an endowment of the best lands around the spot, a right of fishery not restricted, and various other privileges, in a retirement made more desirable as it was visited twice a day by the sea bringing fresh air and health with its tide; if monks were capable of happiness, surely those of Pill might have felt themselves so.”

Brother Walter - Prior of the Benedictine priory of Pill near Milford.

Little is known of this priory till the 14c-- It was founded by Adam de Rupe or de Roche and had the old parish Church of Hubberston as part of its endowment.

In the 14c tongues began to wag at the scandalous doings of the Prior, and the matter came to the ears of the Bishop of St David's. He conducted a visitation in 1405, as a result of which the Prior was sternly admonished to mend his ways. So hardened was the Prior that he appears to have taken not the slightest notice of his superior, who, a year and a half later was forced to write to him-

"We say it with grief that thou, brother Walter, prior aforesaid has not troubled to observe in your persons such injunctions.... but has lightly presumed daily and dost still presume to infringe and violate them... to the scandal of thy order".

Then followed a long catalogue of the Priors Misdeeds.

The Bishop pointed out that although it is written "maintain parents" it does not mean that the Prior should take them to live with him in the priory, and spend the income of the priory on them. Still less should he entertain quarrelsome friends there and "wickedly consume the goods of the said priory with Joan Moris, wife of John Hicke thy paramour, whom thou has held in adulterous embraces for some years".

So lavishly had the Prior converted the priory's income to his own use that it had become heavily in debt, and he "sorely oppressed" any of the monks who criticized him and allowed those who meekly acquiesced to go in or out just as they pleased without question.

3 June, 1405

Guy, etc., to the prior and convent of the blessed Virgin Mary, Pylle in Ros, of the order of St. Benedict of Tiron, of our diocese, greeting etc.

Whereas by Grace of observing the rule of our profession we are stirred up by salutary precepts and monitions that watchful for the flock entrusted to us we may with exact diligence purge out novelties and errors which have grown up in the past times especially amongst religious men, we on 23 April, 1405, and following days, made a visitation in very deed of your priory aforesaid by certain commissaries. In order therefore that the defects and excEsses found in your priory aforesaid in such our visitation canonically carried out by such our Commissaries may by the help of the Divine mercy be brought into a better state, Master Robert Rawlyn, Canon of our Church of St. David's., our vicar general in spiritualities (we being then for necessary causes engaged in distant parts) by our authority, canonically drew up for you the injunctions, monitions, precepts and mandates written below and charged and commanded under the pains and censures contained in the same that these be observed by you and every one of you for your good, nevertheless it has several times come to our ears by the testimony of faithful men, by public report and by notoriety of fact (we say it with grief) that thou brother Walter, prior aforesaid, hast not troubled to observe in your person such injunctions, monitions, precepts and mandates, admitted in the first instance by receipt and both tacitly and expressly, but hast lightly presumed daily and dost still presume to infringe and violate them in many ways to the great peril of thy soul, a pernicious example to very many, the scandal of thy order, the diminution of public worship, and the grievous damage of the before said priory, prodigally consuming the goods and jewels of the same. Wherefore we have charged and enjoined on thee, over and above the former command, in virtue of holy obedience and under the pains and censures contained in the same injunctions, etc., that thou observe all and singular the things included in the same concerning and relating to your person, and especially that thou abstain altogether from all and all manner of alienation of the temporal goods of the said priory, that thou presume not to violate our said sequestration duly and lawfully imposed by the aforesaid Master Robert Rawlyn, vicar etc., on the goods of the said priory because thou didst before that notoriously dissipate and waste these and there is every reason to fear that thou wilt so waste these in future and to be observed by thee, as is aforesaid, under the penalties in the constitution of the Holy Fathers in thast behalf duly published [and] that thou cause the relics, jewels, ship and other goods of the said priory which have been unduly alienated by thee, beyond and contrary to such injunctions, etc., to be at once restored to the priory.

And inasmuch as we have found the aforesaid William Scheperd, fellow-monk and cellarer of the said priory, Walter Jordan, Sirs Thomas Heth and William Lyghtfot, rectors of Talbenny and Jonyston, powerless to keep our said sequestration, without other help, on account of the might, rebellion and disobedience of the said prior, by the tenour of these presents we add to them the noble man Sir John Wogan, knight, and Sir William Meylor, vicar of Steynton, committing unto the same, in the Lord, the keeping of the said sequestration.

Wherefore to you Sir John, brother William, Walter and Sirs Thomas, William and William, firmly enjoining we commit and command that you solemnly publish at places and times most suitable for this that our said sequestration has been and s imposed so as is aforesaid, [and], that keep such goods, fruits, rents, tithes and ablations and profits, sequestered so as is aforesaid, under strait and safe sequestration, until you have other Command from us upon this ,as you will answer of and for the same at your peril when this shall be required of you on our behalf, provided nevertheless that in the meantime the said priory be laudably served in divine offices and that the charges incumbent thereon be duly supported by the said brother William the cellarer, as is contained in the same injunctions, monitions, precepts and mandates, of the said Master Robert, our vicar general in spiritualities; inhibiting openly, publicly, and expressly, every one from lightly presuming to violate in any manner whatever such our sequestration, under the penalties in this behalf duly published in the constitutions of the Holy Fathers.

The tenours truly of the same injunctions, etc., follow under this form:—

Robert Raulyn, bachelor in decrees, etc., to the religious men brothers Walter Robjoy, of the priory of the blessed Mary etc., (as above) directly subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary, John Hygyn, William Schepherd and Henry Wratkyn, fellow-monks of the same priory, and forming the convent in the same, sends greeting in the Lord and that ye firmly obey these presents. Whereas in a visitation, ordinary and fatherly, in your said priory now lately exercised judicially and in very deed by certain commisionaries with sufficient authority of the said Rev. father been previous complaints, we have found some defects, negligences omissions, relaxations and excEesses needing necessary reform: and correction, by which if they be not met by a speedy remedy the said priory will incur perpetual ruin and hurt in ritual and temporal things (which be far from it) and loss for which cause we wishing to meet such perils and losses by authority of the said father whose powers we bear, send you our injunctions upon the premises written below, firmly enjoying on you and every one of you in virtue of the holy obedience in which you are bound to the said father and under penalty of the greater excommunication which (the canonical monition having been already given) we pass in these writings and publish, from now as from then and from then as from now, upon your persons if (which be far from you) you will not or trouble not to obey our monitions and injunctions written below, and upon the person of that one of you who among you will not or does not trouble to but neglects to obey, firmly enjoining that you receive humbly our injunctions written below so far as they concern you jointly or each one of you, and render obedience to and obey the same with effect.

First of all, because by the findings of the same visitation, we have found that thou brother Walter, prior beforesaid, Throughout the time and from the time of thy rule and appointment there, hast administered alone, laid out at the peculiar pleasure and decree of thy will, and expended as though they were thine own, all and singular the goods of the said priory spiritual and temporal which ought to be in common among you, and Throughout the time aforesaid and so for eight years and more thou hast rendered no account or reckoning of such thy stewardship and administration, above and contrary to the rules of religion and the canonical sanctions, and the said priory (we record it with sorrow) because of thy prodigality and other things which for the present we do not mention, is burdened with a huge debt, but what and how large this is, is entirely unknown on account of such omission of any reckoning of account and the default among you, the metropolitans.

Wherefore we wishing, as we are bound, to apply a seasonable remedy for such you perils enjoined on you , among other things , strictly charging you [in the name] of the said father, that in all time to come in your same priory one of you whom the prior and the greater and saner party of the monks shall see fit to elect among them shall be appointed yearly to be cellarer, who for his time shall receive all goods of the said priory pertaining to the office of the cellarer, within and without and expend and lay out these towards the sustenance of the prior and his monks, according to the estate and requirement of each one, and the common benefit of the house, and hospitality according to such discretion as is given to him; and the same cellarer, twice every year, namely, within eight days after the feasts of St. Michael and the Apostles Philip and James, or oftener if expedient, shall be bound, whatever be his estate or degree even though he be the prior, to render a faithful account and reckoning before the prior and his confreres, of his receipts, expenses and payments, under penalty of perpetual disability from advancement to any degree or estate, or dignity, in the same priory, removal and deprivation from any degree or dignity already held, unless there be reasonable cause. And because in the appointment of such cellarer in times past, we have found that you the prior and monks have been negligent and remiss, and have tolerated the grave damage and injury to the priory by such sole administration without rendering of account, we, as we are bound in this behalf, supplying your defect, ordain and depute brother William Scheperd, your fellow-monk and confrere, especially discreet and prudent at the same time as we have learned by the report of very many, to be cellarer of your same priory and by these presents have appointed him cellarer, committing to him the administration of all goods of the said priory pertaining to the office of cellarer, within and without, by view nevertheless of the discreet men Walter Jordan and Sir Thomas Heth, William Lyghtfot rectors of Talbenny and Jonyston, in whose hands we have sequestrated and thought well to sequester by these presents all goods of the said priory for fear of dilapidation which we have good reason to fear from the doings of the past, and we strictly charge him to give account of his receipts and administration in manner and form aforesaid and under the penalties abovesaid.

And since we have found in the same visitation that your said priory, although greatly oppressed with debt, is overcharged with superfluous and useless men, we enjoin on you, charging you under the penalties abovesaid, to expel altogether from the same priory within fifteen days immediately following the receipt of these presents Richard Wade, John Wade, his son, and Thomas Newport, because they are talebearers and sowers of discord among you, the prior and monks, and who are entirely useless to the said priory and wasters of it, and also because the said Thomas Newport lightly laid violent hands on the beforesaid Henry Watkyn monk of the said priory, and Sir Robert Martyn, rector of the Church of Pontfayn, and your said prior's father and mother with their household, who are too burdensome and useless to the priory (although it is written "maintain parents' nevertheless it is forbidden to rob Peter and give to Paul, and a man shall leave father and mother and cleave unto the profit of his spouse'), with care, reverence and honour, not tolerating longer the ministering unto them or any other useless persons of the goods of the priory aforesaid, unless some charitable relief and this with the express consent of the convent, without the priory however, and [not] immoderately be bestowed on the priors parents by the hands of the almoner, in no wise to recede in time to come such an useless household for alongstay, under the penalties abovesaid.

Furthermore, charging thee under the penalties above said, we enjoin that thou brother Walter, prior beforesaid Within three months immediately following the date of these presents render a faithful account and reckoning to thy aforesaid confreres of the goods of the priory aforesaid, Throughout the time and from the time of thy rule in the same, and of thy receipts and administration leaving the rolls of the accounts of thee and of the cellarers for the time being in the archives of the house for an example to posterity.

Furthermore we enjoin under the penalties abovesaid, Strictly charging, that the cellarer so by us or by you elected be not removed from office, without the common consent of the convent and the greater part, at the suggestion or dissatisfaction of one of you, and that the said cellarer or prior shall not [jointly] or [singly] make any form or alienation of goods of the said priory to any person whatsoever, except by Common consent, as is aforesaid, after diligent discussion is had upon this in the chapter, and he of you who shall do the contrary in the premises let him be judged as an appropriator and heavily punished according to the regular observances, because that which will touch all should be approved by all.

And because we have found in the same visitation that you monks using fictitious privileges obtained defacto without the licence of your prior, in contempt of your prior and him who has the cure of your souls, confess your sins to others in cases not permitted of right, this thing we forbid to be done henceforth, reserving your confession by these presents to your prior or in his absence to one specially deputed in his place.

And thou prior presume, after a lapse, to confess your sins whatsoever they be to one brother William Stodon, who is too simple and in the intervals of sickness has not discretion and does not know how to use the proper medicine for sins committed, and has no power in the premises because he has not been presented to or received by the ordinary, deceiving your own soul, because when the blind leads the blind both fall headlong into the ditch, this thing we forbid henceforth to him and thee, except in the moment of death, reserving by these presents thy confession in more trivial matters to one of the saner of thy brethren, but graver cases to our Lord the Bishop or his penanced unless thou shalt merit to obtain the more abundant Grace of having a confessor selected for thee by our Lord the Bishop or by us.

And since as in the same visitation we have found that you monks casting off the bridle of obedience do not fear to go out of the bounds of the priory without asking and obtaining the licence of your prior or his special deputy, and alone wandering amongst secular persons contrary to the regular observances, this thing in virtue of holy obedience we forbid henceforth to be one, adding by way of injunction that an accused person convicted in the premises shall be punished for a first offence heavily, for a second more heavily, and for a third shall be delivered to dreadful prisons, from this injunction however we have excepted the cellarer of the house, who as his office requires must be occupied daily within and without about the business of the house. We will, however, that your prior have his chamber by the house, his faculty, disposition and honour, as is meet.

Also we have found in the same visitation that thou, prior, on thy part, and you, monks, on yours, making division and party, cleaving unto seculars and secular power, prodigally consume the common goods of your priory, this thing we forbid to be done henceforth under the penalties abovesaid, having before our eyes the psalm Behold how good and joyful a thing it is brethren to dwell together in unity and that only in time of peace is the Author of Peace worshipped well. We will therefore and Command with injunctions, that our present injunctions be laid up in the archives of the house. We will however that a copy be supplied to each one of you that he may not be able to pretend ignorance And of what you do in the premises and in what manner in obeying what we have decreed to be done in this behalf, see that you certify the said Rev. father or us, in his absence, distinctly and openly, by the feast of St. Barnabas the Apostle by your letters patent containing the series of theses sealed with your common seal Dated in the Castle of Lawaden, 3 June, 1405.

1406. 21 November,

Robert Raulyn, bachelor in decrees, Canon of St David's., vicar general in spiritualities of the Rev., etc., Guy, etc., now engaged in distant parts, to the religious man brother Walter Robjoy, prior, etc., sendeth greeting in the Son of the Glorious Virgin and that you firmly obey these presents.

Whereas in a visitation . . . and fatherly in the said priory now late in time judicially and in very deed carried out by certain commissaries, with sufficient authority of the said Rev. father, there having been previous complaints made, we have found clearly by legal documents plain evidence, strong presumptions, and notoriety of fact, which cannot be hid by any prevarication, that thou brother Walter, prior beforesaid, hast wickedly consumed the goods of the said priory with Joan Moris, wife of John Hicke, thy paramour, whom thou hast held in adulterous embraces for some years, to the great peril of thy soul, a pernicious example to many, the scandal of thy order, and the grave damage of thy said priory, and prodigally wasted these by gifts to thy pimps and fautors favouring thee and the said paramour in such crime of adultery and to several secular jurors in order that they should feloniously indict brother John Baker thy fellow-monk, in his lifetime, and maliciously oppress other of thy fellow-monks according to the ordering of thy will, to the grave damage of them and thy priory and the scandal of the order, so that thy said priory in consequence of the premises and other excesses, not at present set out here on account of a feeling of reverence interceding for thee in this behalf, is burdened with an enormous debt.

In order therefore that by the help of the Divine mercy such defects may be reformed, we, by authority of the said father whose powers we bear, send specially to thee by these presents the injunctions, monitions, precepts and mandates written within, in addition to other injunctions specially sent to thee and thy fellow monks jointly under this same date.

Seeing that we are to abstain not only from evil but from all appearance of evil we enjoin on thee on pain of deprivation and removal from the office of thy priory before said not to go in person to Joan herself or her house, openly or in secret, nor to have speech with her in anything likely to cause suspicion; and we inhibit thee under the penalties abovesaid from entering into any contract of purchase, sale, accommodation, or loan, in respect of goods of thy priory or doing anything in the way of charging thy priory, without the express consent of all thy fellow-monks or the greater part of the same we admonish thee also, once, twice, thrice, and peremptorily, that thou obey our said injunctions, monitions, precepts and mandates, and humbly observe these, on pain of the greater excommunication which, in view of the delay, the fault and the offence, which have gone before, we pass in these writings and publish, from now as from then and from then as from now, against thy person if thou obey not the same zenith effect. In witness whereof etc. Dated in our inn at London, 21 November, 1406, and the tenth year of our consecration.

Old Skeleton found.

Human remains believed to date from the 12c have been uncovered by workmen laying sewerage pipes at lower Priory Milford Haven. Fragments of an adult skeleton were found just outside the walls of a priory by contractors working for Pembrokeshire County Council. The site is believed to have been a burial ground. Work on the site has been stopped whilst the council awaits a pathologist report.

Western Telegraph Wed Oct 2 1996 by Beverley Mortimer.

Residents of Lower Priory Milford Haven are calling for the remains of sixteen bodies unearthed near to the 12th century priory to be re-interred in the grounds of the ruins.

The householders believe that the human skeletons - which include a women and a young child - belong in the ancient burial ground where they were unearthed rather than in a local cemetery.

Said Mr Roger Richardson who lives at The Steps in Lower Priory on which part of the monument is sited -

"I have spoken to nearly every resident and regardless of their religious orientation, they agree that the bones belong here. But we would need to get special permission to re-bury them outside a dedicated cemetery.

"I am quite prepared to see the Bones buried in my garden under the monument and have spoken to MP Nick Ainger about this - But Cadw would have to agree. What I do not want is some Official saying that we must put them in the cemetery because 'that is what it says in his little book'".

The first fragments of an adult skeleton- were unearthed just outside the walls of the priory by workmen laying sewage pipes under the road through the village four weeks ago . Work was halted while forensic tests were carried out and Home Office permission obtained to carry out exhumations at the site.

Since then, 15 further skeletons have been found about one metre below the surface and the Dyfed Archaeological Trust is hailing it as an important discovery.

Said Mr. Richard Ramsey, the site archaeologist: "Nine of the burials are complete and are east-west orientation which indicates a Christian burial. The skeletons are of young people with their hands laid across their chests. We believe the burials took place at different eras between the 11th and 14th centuries as the later graves were covered in broken slate and building debris as if re-building work took place at that time. There is no evidence of any coffins but it was obviously a very busy graveyard."

One of the most exciting discoveries is of the footings of the northern wall of the north transept of the priory which has revealed the full extent of the building. Other artefacts recovered include a fragment of medieval floor tile and a shard of Pottery.

The priory was founded in 1170 by Adam de Rupe or de Roche and its rights and privileges were confirmed and extended by later members of the family. It was subordinate of St Dogmael's Abbey and a sister priory to the Caldey Island abbey. The monks were reformed Benedictines of the order of Tiron.

Its end came with the dissolution of the Monasteries by Henry VIII during the reformation in the early 1500s. The last prior was William Watt.

It was also severely damaged by Cromwellian forces in during the Civil War of the early 1640s. The excavation work has been funded by Welsh Water.

1314 John de Roche was buried at the Priory in return provided for three chaplains to celebrate divine mass

1383 on the death of Thomas de Roche the manor of Pill and Roch reverted to the Crown
Pill priory then came under episcopal visitation

1536 Pill Priory dissolved under the suppression of monastic houses with value of less than £200 and became the property of the Crown. Pill was worth £67 15s 3d gross

1546 the Priory with all its holding after having been leased to various tenants was sold to Roger Barlow of Slebech and his brother Thomas for £705 6s 3d and included the rectories of Boulston, Martletwy, Minwear and Slebech. There are no records to show the Priory was used as a residence.

1758 Catherine Barlow heiress married Sir William Hamilton and brought to him large estates including the Milford area.

THE CEMETERY

The sewage pipe excavations, observed during the 1996-7 watching brief, revealed 31 human exhumations in an area north of the priory Church. They occupied a 55-m section for the pipe trench, which was machine-excavated, averaging 1.60 m in width and 3 m in depth, and ran along the lane towards the bridge over the eastern stream.

The normal planning procedure had been bypassed and the watching brief was undertaken as an emergency measure; most of the burials were cleaned for recording and left in situ. The circumstances did not allow for detailed analysis of the little human bone that was lifted, which was in any case fragmentary and generally unstratified

The Church appears to have been unaisled, cruciform around a three-storey central tower, and of moderate size. The surviving fragments appear to be of a single build, which is stylistically transitional and contemporary with the foundation date-range. The present assemblage of two-storey buildings south of the Church appear to incorporate the remains of vaulted, conventual buildings including an east range of vaulted chambers and a southern chamber, possibly a kitchen or warming house, that may not have formed part of a proper south range. They cannot be closely dated, having been extensively rebuilt for 'lower gentry' domestic use after the Dissolution, when the Church appears to have been abandoned. Evidence for a west range is so far absent but a possible infirmary is suggested by geophysics. A broadly medieval date is suggested for the associated cemetery, in which 31 burials were densely distributed in the small area observed, space apparently being at a premium. The modest size of the community suggests that some of these represent lay burials, and so there may have been additional endowments to the one recorded bequest. There is no standing evidence for the extent of the precinct but a hard physical boundary may never have been present.

Old Castle Head, RCAM

This earthwork had been practically destroyed by modern structures which have collected on and around the site. When examined by Lieut Col. Morgan RE in the year 1870, it presented the appearance of an entrenchment 150yds in length, cutting off a triangular enclosure that projected into Milford Haven. The enclosure was to some extent protected on the east and west sides by cliffs, about 30 ft high, but by no means precipitous. The rampart, of which traces still remain, was 7ft high with a fall of 17ft to a ditch 6ft deep which has become a lane. The field immediately to the south is called "Encampment Field" in the Tithe Schedule visited 3rd August 1920

A Note on the Memorial to Lord Nelson.

A visitor to St. Katharine's Church cannot fail to notice the memorial to Lord Nelson and may well ask why it is there and that it has taken the particular form it has. The answer is a trifle complicated. Milford is a "new town". It was built on practically vacant site under a private Act of Parliament of 1790 which was procured by Sir William Hamilton to whom the property came through his first marriage with the Pembrokeshire heiress, Catherine Barlow of Slebech. Sir William was pointed Envoy Extraordinary to the Court of Naples in 1764. Therefore entrusted the foundation and development of the town to his nephew Charles Francis Greville. In August 1802, together with his second wife (nee Amy Lyon and more generally known as Emma Hart) Sir William with Lord

Nelson visited Milford to see the progress of the work there. Greville was about to build a Chapel which he considered to be as he said he "essential appendage of a town". It was not completed and consecrated until 1808, three years after the death of Nelson.

Greville wished to commemorate Nelson's visit to Milford in some permanent form. He wrote to Thomas Burgess, Bishop of St David's., and suggested a porphyry vase and the truck of the mainmast of the French ship L'Orient which had been blown up at the battle of the Nile should be placed on a pedestal. The vase should be used as a font. The wording he proposed was "Let those who are baptised at this font be taught that because Lord Nelson's piety and loyalty were equal to his valour he never exclaimed in vain to his daring fleet England expects every man to do his duty." To this, the Bishop strongly objected. The vase was of some unknown heathen origin. The truck of the mainmast had been polluted by "a complication of blood and carnage". The inscription "was very unfit for the place it was intended". "The office of baptism" the Bishop pointed out "is one of the most sacred acts of the Christian Ministry and the celebration of it should be associated with no reflections but of a spiritual nature". He suggested that a place should be found in front of the Chapel or somewhere inside, and the urn and truck might be a cenotaph in honour of Nelson.

Greville was disappointed but had to acquiesce. A brass plate was prepared with the words:

HORATIO - VICE - COMITI - NelsonO

DUCI - DE - BRONTE

CENOTAPHIUM - POSUIT - C.F.G.

The porphyry vase has always remained in the Church; but the truck was removed and may now be seen in the Royal United Services Institute, WhiteHall, among the Nelson relics (exhibit 2199).

Legend has gathered round the vase. In the centenary number of the Parish Magazine (1908) it is definitely stated that Lady Hamilton presented it. This is repeated in Notes and queries 20

December 1952. Fortunately Greville gives the facts in a letter which he wrote to the Bishop in June 1807 "Chance enabled me to acquire a Red Porphyry Vase which Bishop Pococke brought from Egypt and gave to the E. of Bessborough and it was sold at his death and the British Museum was in treaty for it when I acquired it".

In a further letter to Bishop in defence of his idea about the use of the urn as a font he declares that it was of so ancient a date that it was coveted the Trustees of the British Museum as prior to idol worship.

That it is of Egyptian origin is undoubted. It is known that indefatigable traveller Richard Pococke (1704-1765), afterwards Bishop of Meath, went up the Nile as far as Philae in 1737. The objection to its use as a font because it may have ministered profane rites was known to Richard Fenton (A Historical Tour through Pembrokeshire, 1811), though he does not ascribe it to the Bishop. What he describes as the 'objectionable porphyry' remains as part of Greville's wish to commemorate Nelson, in particular his visit to Milford.

Friends' Meeting House;Religious Society Of Friends;Quakers, Priory road, Milford Haven
Quakers and Milford

Due to persecution after the Civil War, many Quakers left Pembrokeshire and settled in Pennsylvania but there was still a presence in Haverfordwest and near Narberth. Maybe at Pembroke as well with burials at St Daniels although whether they actually used the Chapel is just a speculation.

One of the places that Quakers settled in America was Nantucket Island purchased by Edward Starbuck, Tristram Coffin, Peter Folger and others in 1659 where they built up a whale fishery and sperm oil business trading sperm oil for the lighting in Great Britain.

During the war for Independence they were loyal supporters of King George but also non-combatants so their ships and farms were plundered by both sides.

Afterwards they were invited to transfer to Nova Scotia retaining their right to be British subjects. This they did built a town they called Dartmouth but it was not totally suitable so when Greville invited them to come to his proposed new town at Milford with the advantages for shipping of the Haven they agreed. Samuel Starbuck and Timothy Folger and their wives had been awarded pensions of £150 for losses sustained during the war and it was agreed that the value of their Dartmouth estates would be transferred to them on the commitment to build to an equal amount at Milford town.

In 1791 Samuel Starbuck and Timothy Folger with their families, twenty five other families and thirteen ships moved to Milford. Stone was quarried and timber obtained to build houses laid out in three Long Streets. Also the Quay and customs house . The Starbuck brothers established bakeries and stores

For Meetings they met in each others homes, or travelled to Haverfordwest.

The whaling industry did not survive long although the Americans contributed to the community in many other ways.

Mrs Samuel Starbuck senior died in 1801 and Greville was asked for land for a burial place and site for a meeting house. A plot was given at the top of the town and the plain meeting place was built and opened in 1811 with the burial place markers, simple stones with date and initials round it.

Through the 19th century and early 20th century membership in the county was small.

Haverfordwest Meeting, formerly on the site of the Shire Hall closed around 1830, leaving Milford as the only meeting.

The Friends' Meeting House was built in 1811 to the design of architect Griffith Watkins of Haverfordwest. This Chapel is built in the Vernacular style with a projecting porch, flanking cambered arches to the sash windows and a short-wall entry plan.

Milford ----HMS Prize --- WW1

I came across a reference, while researching a totally different subject, to this ship and it's Commander.

Originally, at her launching in 1901, the three masted topsail schooner was named "Else" but after her capture on the 4th August 1914 by British destroyers and her subsequent sale, she was renamed "First Prize" by her new owners, the Marine and Navigation Company. In 1916 she was moored at Swansea and, after inspection, requisitioned by the Admiralty who were searching for suitable vessels to convert to Q-ships. In fact the Marine and Navigation Company lent her to the Admiralty at no charge.

The Schooner that the Admiralty took over was one of 200 tons, 122 feet 6 inch in length constructed of steel on iron frames with two auxiliary diesel engines. She had been built at the Smit and Zoon yard at WesterBrock.

After completion of the conversion which included the mounting of two concealed 12 pounder guns, one in the superstructure forward and one in the deck structure aft, she was based at Milford Haven. She also had at least one Lewis Gun but I could not find out whether this was the type with the 47 round circular magazine or the 97 round one. The firing rate was about 500 rounds per minute but it was normally fired in short bursts and had an effective range of about 700 yards.

On the 5 February 1917 Lieutenant (later Lieutenant Commander) William E Sanders from New Zealand who had served in the Merchant navy with both steam and sailing vessels since 1899 and had been gazetted an acting Sub Lieutenant in the Royal Naval reserve in June 1915, took command of Q21 renamed HMS Prize with her twenty seven crew.

After his original commission in June 1915 he had attended a gunnery course then served on HMS Sabrina then HMS Idaho. On 6th September 1916 he was appointed second in command of HMS Helgoland Morley. His promotion to Lieutenant Commander was announced on 25th April 1917. On the 30th April 1917 the Prize was on a cruise in the Atlantic south of Ireland flying a Swedish flag in good weather when a submarine the UB 93 which was on the surface about 3 miles away, spotted her. It was growing dusk about 20.35 but the submarine immediately opened fire. Saunders ordered the Prize to be turned into the wind to give the "panic" party a chance to man the boat and get clear giving the impression that the crew of the Prize had abandoned ship. The rest of the Prize's crew took cover and hid themselves from the sight of the submarines crew. After a short break in the shelling from the submarine, while the "panic" boat drew clear, they resumed shelling the Prize. Every shell from the "U" boat was on target hitting the Prize again and again. The Commander of U93 Captain - Lieutenant Baron Spiegel von-und-zu Peckelsheim was suspicious of HMS Prize as there had been reports of "Q"ships towing submarines or accompanied by one who would wait till the "U-Boat was a sitting target then torpedo it. Nearly half an hour passed before the U93 came close to the Prize which by this time appeared to be sinking. When the U93 was broadside on and close to the port side of the Prize, Lieutenant Commander gave the order for the false bulkheads to be dropped and the 12 pounders to open fire. He also hoisted the white Ensign and lowered the Swedish flag. Within seconds both guns had opened fire. The first shell from the fore gun of the Prize hit the fore gun of the U93 killing or injuring many of the gun crew. Von Spiegel ordered a full speed and the helm over hard to port so as to present a smaller target to the Prize and also give a better target for his stern gun. Hits from the shells from the Prize caused the U93's engines to cut out leaving her wallowing in the sea a ready target for the guns of the Prize. This advantage was taken and shells found targets on the deck, conning tower and hull. Gradually the U93 settled and

[The specifications for the U 93 say she had one gun mounted forward of 10.5 cm with 140 rounds of ammunition but the description of the conflict would suggest she had a second gun mounted aft either another 105mm gun or an 88 mm.]

seemed to sink. Von Spiegel and two other crew members were rescued by the "panic" boat of the Prize. The Prize had in four minutes fire 36 rounds of ammunition from the 12 pounders and the Lewis gun had seen action against the submarine gun crews and those in the conning tower. The Prize was however in a very bad state and near sinking. Water was pouring in from where the shells had exploded blowing holes in the steel hull. Despite the efforts of the crew in plugging the gaping holes with all available material including their hammocks when water pouring in could not be controlled by the pumps. Fortunately the majority of the damage was on the port side so the Prize was swung onto the port tack and every effort made to give a list to starboard raising the damaged port side of the hull higher out of the sea. This reduced the amount of water pouring in to the vessel and enabled more substantial repairs to be made. There were also problems with the auxiliary engines one of which had been very badly damaged and the other would not start. One of the Germans rescued with the U93 Captain was a diesel mechanic and he was soon able to get the one engine running although creating alarm because the engine caused a very smoky fire in the engine room. Lieutenant Von Spiegel recorded that the first time he saw Lieutenant Saunders was when he rushed past him carrying a fire extinguisher. His description Read "A tall slender chap in his 20's with a good looking English face, fine brown eyes, and blond hair which sprawled over his head".

HMS Prize was able to get underway and headed for its home port of Milford Haven. There were many wounded on board and it was essential to get medical treatment for them as soon as possible. They were met by HM Drifter Rival II which took them in tow and the next day reached Milford Haven safely

Captain - Lieutenant Baron Spiegel von-und-zu Peckelsheim was taken ashore as a prisoner of war. He returned to Germany after the war, wrote a book about submarines and died age 79 at Bremen on 15 May 1965.

Everyone on HMS Prize believed that the U93 had sunk but although very badly damaged she was able to escape as darkness and the smoke gave her cover. Her periscopes had been shot away, there were eight shell holes in the deck, five diving Tanks and two compressed air compartments ripped open as well as the oil Tanks leaking. Lieutenant Zeigler realised that there was no possibility of the submarine diving but despite the damage the submarine made its way back to Sylt 9 days later.

Lieutenant Commander William Sanders RNR, for sinking the U-boat was awarded the Victoria Cross

The repairs to HMS Prize took 6 weeks and then she sailed again. This time she attacked another submarine but again the damage was severe and Lieutenant Commander Sanders was wounded. For this action Sanders was awarded the Distinguished Service Order.

On the 13 August 1917 HMS Prize after repairs was once again hunting but this time she was accompanied by a Royal Navy Submarine D9(?). Twice during the day the crew sighted the wake of a periscope but no sign of a submarine. In fact HMS Prize was being stalked by the German Submarine U48 which had been warned about HMS Prize and her tactics. through the day the U43

Captain checked HMS Prize's speed and course and at 1.30am on the 14th August 1917 launched a torpedo attack with two torpedoes. HMS Prize was totally destroyed and the no survivors were found.

In June 1918 Lieutenant Commander William Sanders RNR father was presented with his son's VC and DSO by the Governor General of New Zealand at Auckland Town Hall.

The original citation in the London Gazette of 22nd June 1917 Read "In recognition of his conspicuous gallantry, consummate coolness and skill in commend of His Majesty's ships in action"

This was enhanced after the war when the London Gazette published the following

"Admiralty. 20 November, 1918. With reference to the announcements of the award of the Victoria Cross to Naval Officers and men for services in action with enemy submarines, the following are the accounts of the actions for which these awards were made.

Action of HMS Prize on 30 April, 1917. HMS Prize a topsail schooner of 200 tons under the command of Lieutenant William Edward Sanders RNR, sighted an enemy submarine at three miles range and approaching slowly astern.

The "panic party" in charge of Skipper William Henry Brewer RNR (Trawler Section), immediately abandoned ship.

The ship's head was put into the wind, and the gun crews concealed themselves lying face downwards on the deck. The enemy continued deliberately shelling the schooner, inflicting severe damage and wounding a number of men. For twenty minutes she continued to approach, firing as she came, but at length, apparently satisfied that no one remained on board she drew out of the schooner's quarter 70 yards away. The white Ensign was hoisted immediately, the screens dropped, and all guns opened fire. A shell struck the foremost gun of the submarine, blowing it to atoms and annihilating the crew.

Another shot demolished the conning tower, and at the same time a Lewis gun raked the survivors off the submarine's deck. She sank four minutes after the commencement of the action in clouds of smoke, the glare of an internal fire being visible through the rents in her hull. The captain of the submarine, a warrant officer and one man were picked up and brought on board the Prize, which was then herself sinking fast. Captors and prisoners however succeeded in plugging the shot holes and keeping the water under pumps. The Prize set sail for land, 120 miles distant. They were finally picked up two days later by a motor launch and towed the remaining five miles into harbour. The award of the Victoria Cross to Acting Lieutenant William Edward Sanders was announced in the London Gazette No. 30147 dated 22nd June, 1917."

founder of Milford Haven town, Pembs , second son of Francis , earl of Warwick , and his wife Elizabeth Hamilton He became the agent , and subsequently the heir, of his mother's brother, Sir William Hamilton 1730 - 1803 , who had succeeded to a considerable estate in South Pembrokeshire through his marriage with Catherine Barlow of Colby d 1782 In 1790 Hamilton obtained a private act of parliament which enabled him to develop his property in the manors of Hubberston and Pill , to build Quays, docks, piers, to establish a Market, provide roads, etc Since he was absent from the country as British minister at the court of Naples 1764-1800 he entrusted the carrying out of the scheme to Greville To this task Greville devoted himself with great energy He built a custom-house for the convenience of shipping and an inn for the accommodation of passengers to Ireland He invited several families of American Quakers , who had been engaged in South Sea whaling from Nantucket Island , Massachusetts , to settle at Milford The first of them arrived in 1793 and for some years they carried on trade in sperm oil which had been used as an illuminant in London He also induced the navy board to commission the building of frigates, the first contracts being signed in April 1797 In the town itself, which was laid out in three Streets parallel with one another, he had a Church built which was consecrated in 1808 and dedicated to S Katherine A Friends' meeting house was opened in 1811 in the enclosure where many members of the American immigrants are buried Greville also projected a school or College of navigation provided with an observatory , which was never completed He staged a first-class piece of publicity for his new town by inducing Sir William and Lady Hamilton , accompanied by Lord Nelson , to visit it in Aug 1802 The event, coinciding with the anniversary of the battle of the Nile , was celebrated by a cattle-show, sports, regatta, and a banquet at which Nelson made a speech in which he highly praised Greville 's achievements The presence of Lady Hamilton 1765 - 1815 , née Amy Lyon and more generally known as Emma Hart , naturally attracted much attention In her youth she had been a protégée of Greville It was he who introduced her to his friend Romney , whose portrait studies of her are so well known She subsequently went to Naples and in 1791 became the second wife of Sir William Hamilton After the death of Greville in April 1809 , the new town entered upon a period of depression Greville was succeeded by his younger brother

Greville Robert Fulke 1751 - 1824 sometime equerry to King George III He took but a tepid interest in his brother's projects When the Admiralty proposed to purchase the site of the dockyard, for which it had been paying a yearly rent, he refused to accept its valuation It was therefore decided to transfer the establishment to a site at Paterchurch , higher up the Haven and on the opposite side This transfer was effected in 1814 and thus was founded Pembroke Dock , which remained a royal dockyard for over a century The demand for sperm oil was struck a fatal blow by the growing use of coal gas as an illuminant. Robert Fulke Greville was succeeded by his son, also

Greville Robert 1800 - 1867 He stood for the county in the general election of 1831 against Owen Sir John of Orielton and was defeated by 109 votes Both candidates felt the heavy financial strain of the contest For the next twenty years Greville lived abroad He served with the rank of major in the British Auxiliary Legion during the Carlist rising in Spain Later he lived near Paris In 1853 he returned to his estate and attempted to retrieve the fortunes of Milford He took up his residence at the 18th cent country house, Castle Hall , to which he made extensive additions The South Wales railway reached Haverfordwest in 1854 and Greville made every effort to have it extended to Milford When the directors decided to make Neyland the terminus he sought powers to effect a junction with it at Johnston He also supported a project to construct a railway from Milford to Manchester through Mid Wales to secure for the port a share in the American trade At his own cost he had a wooden pier, pier-house, and hotel built for the Irish traffic He also had two bridges with road approaches constructed to facilitate lateral communication across the two inlets or pills between which the town lies Against much local opposition he succeeded in getting an Improvement Act 1857 for the appointment of commissioners with power to levy a rate and raise capital to provide the town with gas-works, water-works, etc His many schemes exhausted his resources His estate was mortgaged far beyond its value and it passed to the most important creditor, the National Provident Institution Greville died on 12 September 1867 and was buried in S Katherine's Church where his memorial records that 'he sacrificed his Fortune in his endeavour to promote and develop the resources of this place'

Hamilton William Sir 1761? Lawrenny 1st wife Catherine Barlow of Slebech only daughter and heiress of Hugh Barlow WWHR 1915

Hamilton William 1790 obtained permission from Parliament to establish a Market and port Milford owner St Florence Flayton 1802 prop Church of Martletwy 2nd wife he is alleged to have paid £6000 pounds for her Amy Lyon alias Emma Hart became Lady Hamilton mistress of Lord Nelson-- died 19th April 1803 CRO Land Tax Records 1791/2, Pembrokeshire Parsons, Act 30 George III c 5a section 2a 26 survey of 1790

Mr Laws puts it History of Little England 1888 p 400 "By very many persons it is supposed that Milford Haven takes its name from Milford town, but the great estuary was christened a thousand years ago while the town came into being during the last quarter of the 18c"

He then tells the story of the marriage of Miss Barlow of Colby to Sir William Hamilton by which the latter obtained possession of the manors of Pill and Hubberston how in 1784 Hamilton two years after the death of his wife visited Pembrokeshire with his nephew the Hon Charles Grenville, who immediately saw money in Milford Haven how Hamilton met the lovely Emma a domestic in Grenville's house in Paddington Green, and became infatuated with her how Emma was sold to him for £6000 by the honourable gentleman, who now took over and began to lay out his new town, that is Milford and how in 1802 a queer quartet assembled at Milford Charles Grenville, Sir William Hamilton, Lord Nelson and Emma by now Lady Hamilton

Acc/to western Telegraph Then & Now Wed July 10 1991

"Nelson and the Hamiltons were at that time living in the famous Ménage de Trios at Merton, Place near Wimbledon Nelson and Emma were lovers something which Sir William seemed to accept"

Charles Francis Grenville, Sir William's nephew and heir who had been Emma's lover before he introduced her to Sir William was managing the Hamilton Pembrokeshire estates for his uncle Sir William had voiced concern over Grenville's reported financial excEsses in developing the new town of Milford and had been invited down by Grenville to see for himself The three left Merton, on July 21st 1802 and arrived at Milford on July 31st Nelson was feted all the way They were greeted at Milford by Grenville and a flag waving throng at the New Inn Front St renamed two days later the Lord Nelson

As the next day was the fourth anniversary of Nelson's Victory at the Nile, Grenville arranged a few days' celebrations including a sumptuous banquet at the New Inn attended by all the leaders of west Wales society It was here that Nelson made his speech in praise of the Milford Haven Waterway and those involved with its development

They then visited Lord Milford at Picton near the home of the Barlows at Slebech where Sir William's first wife Catherine Barlow had been buried

Haverfordwest was the next stop where they stayed in Foley House with Captain Foley a naval colleague He and Nelson were granted the freedom of the borough on the next day Aug 7th Aug 10th 1802 they visited Lord Cawder at Stackpole Court then Tenby before returning to Merton, via Birmingham which they reached on September 5th 1802

Sir William Hamilton died, in the arms of Emma on 19th April 1803 and is buried alongside his first wife Catherine in the old Church at Slebech

Milford Haven - Mrs Mary Mirehouse, Sir William Hamilton, Ambassador at Naples, grandson of the third Duke of Hamilton, married in 1758 Catherine, daughter of John Barlow of Slebech she died 1782 through her he acquired property at Milford Haven, for which his nephew, the Hon Charles Greville, son of the Earl of Warwick, acted as agent Charles Greville had taken up a very lovely girl, Emma Hart, whom Sir William much admired, calling her 'the Fair tea-maker' when they met at Greville's house Greville started great schemes at Milford planned docks, and built a large pier he was soon overwhelmed with debt, and then made a shameful bargain with Sir William, the result of which was that Emma was enticed to Naples, on the pretext of Masters for her beautiful voice and there fell into Sir William's hands After five years they returned to England, and were there married on September 6, 1791 Milford was transferred to Greville, with a settlement of £800 per annum on the bride

In 1800 the Government rented the Milford Shipbuilding Yard for fourteen years, and Greville, Sir William and Lady Hamilton, and Lord Nelson all met at a banquet given at the Lord Nelson Hotel at Milford by Greville apparently without any awkwardness being felt by anyone Charles Grenville died in 1809, leaving the Milford property to his brother Robert In 1814 the Government lease ran out, and was not renewed, the money demanded being too extortionate From that time the fortunes of Milford declined, and untold sums were sunk and lost in the effort to revive them, both by Robert Greville and his son, also Robert The latter finally quitted the place, his only son having been thrown from his horse and killed in Hyde Park The Government in 1814 began to build the present dockyard on the site then known as Pater-Church, the Haven Forts were afterwards built for its protection

David Lloyd of Cilciffeth married Mary daughter of John Wogan of Wiston David Lloyd was mayor of Wiston in 1628 and died on Oct 4th 1631 their fourth daughter married 3 times the first being George Barlow of Minwear and Slebech whose administration was granted her on 17th July 1662 Their eldest son John Barlow, on whom his mother had settled her estates in 1662 also inherited his fathers estate of Slebech and was created a baronet in 1677 He married Katherine Middleton and had 3 sons The eldest George succeeded to the Properties but by 1708 had accumulated debts to the tune of over £8000 and to resolve his difficulties he conveyed the estates to his brother John who lived at Colby in Wiston Parish and Clarges St London They had an only child according to her Mother a poor nervous creature delicate, pious, who played the harpsichord and enjoyed a rent roll of £5000 per annum In 1758 Catherine Barlow,

Castle Hall; St. Brides Abbey, Milford Haven

Castle Hall Milford Haven, was built c.1765 for J. Z. Howell former governor of Bengal (survivor of the Black Hole of Calcutta). In 1804, Benjamin Rotch, North American Quaker and owner of whaling ships, who settled at Milford bought the Castle Hall estate. In the mid-19th century the estate was purchased by R.F Greville who had the house rebuilt in 1855-7. He added towers and a vast portico in Italian Renaissance style. The tower to the north of the house was some 27 metres (90 feet) high, with four niches mid way up in which were set over life-size statues. Between 1910-1917 the building was occupied by Benedictine nuns and known as St Brides Abbey. It was demolished in 1935.

Old Castle Rath, Milford

A tear-drop shaped enclosure, about 54m by 96m, resting on steep natural slopes above Milford Haven to the south-west and south-east, and formerly delineated by a strong bank and ditch along the north: the site, which has been identified as a Civil War fortification, is now completely built over, a sunken road following the line of the ditch.

Priory Rath, Milford

A roughly oval defended enclosure, about 94m by 82m, set on ground falling to the west above a minor inlet off Milford Haven; the enclosure is defined by a bank and ditch on the south-east, facing rising ground, & elsewhere by scarps, having a possible entrance to the south. (source Os495card; SM90NW4)

Pill Rath

An oval enclosure above Castle Pill about one third of a mile east by north of the parish Church; it measures about 40ft by 50 ft. Only the southern half of the rampart 250ft in length remains and this has been much reduced by cultivation. It is best preserved to the south east where it rises 3ft to fall 8ft to a ditch which is elsewhere barely perceptible; to the north its outlines can be faintly traced. The entrance had disappeared. The remains are doubtless those of a small defensive post intended to provide cover for men watching the creek, but it is impossible to conjecture its original character of builders. Lieut Col Morgan RE considers it to be the work of Scandinavian raiders

Company Offices Milford Docks

Late 19th century 1 storey, faced with red stone blocks, slate gabled roof, later 2 bays at South East.

Milford Docks Company was incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1874. Initially, the aim was to construct a Dockland area that would establish Milford Haven, Pembrokeshire, as a major port. In 1876, the Port Sanitary Authority (now known as the Milford Haven Port Authority) was created. The docks was opened in 1888, and in 1898, the Great western Railway extended its services into Milford Haven Docks. In the early part of the 20th century, Milford Haven was the base for a very large fishing industry and was the sixth largest port in Britain in 1906. The docks centred around the movement of oil from 1960 when Esso opened the first of a number of oil refineries in Milford Haven. A very large Marina now occupies a part of the dock basin.

Milford Haven Dockyard

Sir William Hamilton obtained an Act of Parliament in 1790 to establish the port at Milford on the land of Hubberston and Pill. Charles Greville, his agent, attracted Quaker whalers from Nantucket to settle in Milford in 1793 and also persuaded the Navy Board in 1797 to establish a dockyard to build warships. In 1802 Milford Haven was proclaimed by Lord Nelson as one of the finest harbours ever seen.

In 1810 the Quaker whalers returned to America and in 1814 the Navy Board transferred the dockyard to Pembroke Dock. During this period Milford languished. In 1874 the port was given a boost with the formation of the Milford Docks company (the docks were not completed for another 14 years, opening in 1886). The docks were adapted to the requirements of the fishing industry; ice factories, fish Market and smoke-houses were built, and Milford grew to be one of the chief fishing ports of Britain.

The development of the giant oil Tankers following the Suez crisis in the 1950's led to Milford being developed as a major oil port, because of its deep water channel. In 1960 the Esso oil refinery opened and by the 1970s Milford had become the leading oil port in Britain and the second largest in Europe. However, within 20 years of being opened, the Esso oil refinery was closed.

Pill Priory, Lower Priory, Milford Haven; Formerly 'THE Steps'

The house, formerly known as 'The Steps', was formed by the conversion of conventional buildings, possibly in the seventeenth century. It is thought to incorporate elements of the eastern cloister range of Pill Priory , these being identified as the chapter house, with sacristy and library set between this and the south transept of the priory Church to the north .

Event and Historical Information:

Formerly part of the Milford Haven estate developed by the Greville family from 1790s onwards, the railway and pier serving Irish passenger steamers was eventually sold off as something of a 'White elephant' in 1920 to Sir Hugh James Protheroe. The land was then sold to Messrs Thomas W Ward of Sheffield for ship breaking. Thomas Ward was born in 1853. He started as a coal Merchant and then became a scrap metal dealer in Sheffield opened his ship dismantling department in 1894. The company soon became the largest supplier of scrap metal to the growing steel industry. After the war, most naval vessels built pre-1910 were declared redundant. The vessels decommissioned from 1919 onwards included 22 Dreadnought battleships and battle cruisers totaling approximately 500,000 tons of shipping. Thomas Ward is believed to have had a total of 13 yards including Newton Noyes by the 1920's (e.g. InverKeithing from 1923, New Holland from 1920, and Pembroke Dock from 1926). The yard and its associated land were bought by the Admiralty in 1934 for a munitions depot and to facilitate small ship repairs. Thomas Ward Ltd continued until taken over by Rio Tinto, a British-Australian multinational metals and Mining Corporation, in the early 1980s.

Mynwere (Minwear)Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis

Mynwere (Minwear), a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 4½ miles (W. by S.) from Narberth; containing 149 inhabitants. This parish, from a mistaken etymology of its name, which was Read Mwyn Aur, signifying "a gold mine," was thought to contain gold-ore, and some fruitless attempts were in consequence made to discover it. The name is with greater probability supposed to be derived from a weir on the Eastern Cleddy, on the banks of which river the place is situated, and which was noted for the abundance of fish taken there during the season. The parish comprises a moderate portion of arable and pasture land, all enclosed and in a good state of cultivation. The surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified with wood, there being an extensive plantation on the north-eastern boundary; and the views of the adjacent country are not destitute of interest: Picton Castle, with its rich and well-wooded grounds, appears to much advantage on the other side of the Cleddy, together with Slebech Hall and its demesne. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; present net income of the benefice, £50; patron and impropriator, the Hon. Baron de Rutzen, of Slebech Hall. The Church of Mynwere is dedicated to St. Wonan.

Parish Church Dedicated to St Womar RCAM

The present Church comprises chancel 14ft by 12 ft nave 23 ½ ft by 15 ½ ft north aisle of transeptal Chapel 25 ½ ft by 7 1/2ft south mortuary Chapel 7 ¼ ft by 6 ¾ ft and western tower external 15 ¾ ft by 7 ft.

The Church and parish are delightfully situated on the left bank of the Cleddau a few miles from its fall into Milford Haven, and there can be no doubt that it was early seized upon by a Norse freebooter in search of an agreeable position for a permanent settlement. About the year 1150 the Church of Mynwere, with the tithes of the parish, were granted by Robert, son of Lomer or Lodomer to the preceptor y of the Knights of St John of Jerusalem at Slebech, on the bank of the Cleddau opposite to Minwear. If any vestiges of that Church still remain they are doubtless to be found in the foundations of the present nave, and in the stones used up in subsequent rebuilding and restorations. The original font, the one object that is so often found to link the early churches of Pembrokeshire with the present has not survived at Minwear.

The pleasant surroundings and close proximity to the parent house combined with complete immunity from close surveillance provided by the dangerous river, doubtless rendered Minwear a favourite resort of the brethren of Slebech, and, as the parish appears to have been regarded much as the demesne farm of the preceptory it is probable that the parish Church was well cared for. Its original single chamber was enlarged by the structural addition of a separate chancel, and a north aisle which was made to align at the east end with the newly built chancel, and was carried about midway down the nave. A new Church door set opposite to the earlier south door, gave additional admittance to the Church. The eastern gable wall, which by these changes had become the division between nave and chancel was pierced, and a small arcade formed consisting of a central arch 4 ½ ft wide and 7ft high, with a smaller arch on either side; the piers of this arcade are of masonry, one is octagonal, the others square the arches are round headed, which has given rise to the mistaken idea that they are of the Norman period. To remove the appearance of bareness in the space above the arches two plain sharp pointed window – like orifices were made through the gable. The tomb recess on the south side was probably constructed at the same time. It is vaulted, but is otherwise quite undatable, though the whole of these improvements may be considered as falling within the latter half of the 14th century. The tower may also have been undertaken at this period; its lower storey is vaulted, but it differs considerably from the regular form of Pembrokeshire Church towers of an earlier date. All the windows are modern. The font bowl is an octagon on a modern pillar and base. The bowl is ornamented on each of the two opposite sides with two small human heads placed one above the other, probably intended to represent the four Evangelists, and a small cartouche beneath each head may have been intended to bear the respective names. It was for some years used as a trough on a neighbourhood farm and has suffered accordingly visited 6th July 1920.

(Lomer or Lodomer was a knight in the train of the great Earl Marshal.)

This Benefice was granted to the Knights Hospitallers of St John about the year 1150 Anselm's confirm charter. A grant of the land of Mynwere together with all the land within the territory of Mynwere made by Lodomer and his son Robert was confirmed by Walter Mareseal (Marshall?) Earl of Pembroke (1241 5) with the added right of a "free chase and Warren over the whole manor of Mynwere, including the lands of all the forest of the manor, with all its liberties and customs" [the land appears to have extended as far as Canaston]
On the dissolution of the Monasteries it came into the hands of the Crown and was afterwards sold to John Barlow of Slebech

The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Salter 1994

The small nave and chancel and tiny transept are 13c. The north Chapel with a two bay arcade, the opening either side of the chancel arch, and the belfry raised above the thick west wall are of the 16 & 17c. The four heads on the font probably represent the Four Evangelist.

On the dissolution of the Monasteries it came into the hands of the Crown, and was afterwards sold to [John] Barlow of Slebech.

On 10 Aug., 1870, a faculty was granted for the restoration of the old parish Church and for the addition of a piece of land, as a burial ground, to the old churchyard.

Medieval Buildings -

Sisters House Minwear

- small nucleus of miniature tower houses plus the shell of a great barn, a massive walled garden, the remains of a fish pond a well, a large barrel - vaulted cellar (perhaps the remains of the main domestic building, despite being known as the Chapel) and a ruined water mill on the tidal inlet to the west of the site – published by Preseli District Council

Sisters House RCAM

On the left (south) bank of the Eastern Cleddau immediately opposite the site of Slebech Commandery of the Knights of St John of Jerusalem are the extensive foundations and ruined walls of a building which is known locally as “Sister (or Sisters) houses” The ruins are not marked on the current Ordinance sheets

Fenton (Tour p297) describes the site as that of a “respectable Mansion once inhabited by a brother of the Barlow who resided at Slebech” – a remark which was correct for only the last stage in the existence of a building that was certainly not erected for a “respectable mansion”

The site had been practically lost in a dense thicket of trees and small shrubs until a partial clearance about the commencement of the present century enabled the visitors of the

Pembrokeshire Archaeological Survey to report upon the place as follows :-

“Tithe barn which is not marked on the Ordinance map. The eastern entrance was originally through a porch, but a little building was added on each side, which contained three loops on the basement , and one loop in the upper chamber, which was a mere lodgement under the roof; the western entrance and unprotected barn door. The tithe barn was a gabled building, with a basement and two stories the second being in the roof. The basement had four loops at each end, twelve loops on the east side , thirteen on the west. The first storey seems to have been looped in the same fashion except that the loops alternate. The second storey on the north and south gables had three loops. The building seems to slope south to north, the loops in the basement being about 3ft above the floor in the north, but 5ft on the south where fragments of the flooring still remain; it is of lime and stone. In the building you will find neither fireplace, chimney, window nor stair. All the loops seem to have had a flag above them, but these have been removed. The basement seems to have been about 8ft high, the first gable a trifle less. But the chamber in the roof or second storey about 12ft at the point of the gable. The building, if, as the editor supposes, a tithe barn was constructed to store grain, not thrashed straw. The approaches to the upper chambers must have been by wooden ladders. There are many small dilapidated cottages, and the most perfect of them consists of a barrel vaulted cellar about 6ft high, two stories above it; a western wall is gone. The lower of the two storeys is 14ft by 12 and about 8ft high. In the eastern wall a square headed recessed opening; another window of door blocked up. In the northern wall there is a window; in the southern a fireplace with an aumbrey by its side. In the upper chamber a window in the north side but no fireplace, and it seems approached by an outside stone staircase which is now broken away. The Chapel 18ft by 12 ft, with a barrel vaulted roof east wall not bonded; it was lighted by a narrow square headed window; the west wall is gone, where, presumably, was the entrance. Further west is a mill driven by the stream which falls into Minwere pill, on the side of which probably stood the corn stored in the tithe barn. There are several large areas enclosed by stone walls; in these peradventure the knights Commanders collected tithe cattle and sheep. There is a splendid spring here”

The present condition of the site has frustrated the intention of providing a plan of these interesting ruins, and it has been possible to do more little more than verify the account which has been already given, to add a few further details, and to correct some errors into which earlier visitors have fallen. The main building consists of a long rectangular chamber which appears to have measured 100ft in length and 24 ½ ft in width. This chamber so far as present indications permit us to judge, seems to have been undivided throughout its entire length by solid walling, though it is possible that it may have been partitioned off by wooden screens. The building was aligned north and south, and midway was placed two entrances which practically faced each other. On each side of the eastern doorway was a small building standing at right angles to the main chamber; both these outbuildings were probably of the same or very similar dimensions, that is, of a depth from the main chamber wall of 9 ½ ft and a width of 6 ½ ft; It is impossible to state positively that they communicated with the large chamber, but it may be considered certain that each had a doorway opening upon the short passage between them which lead up to the main entrance. The roofs of the building have completely disappeared but the description as regards the floors and the mode of lighting is doubtless accurate for the date when the survey was taken. The interest concentrates principally upon the small building to the north of the main doorway, the upper storey of which is known as “the Chapel” but no detail beyond its orientation exists to warrant the ascription.

It is, of course, possible that the building was originally constructed as a spacious tithe barn, which would store the chief stock of grain of the Hospitallers during a long period of scarcity; and a small house and Chapel would be the regular accompaniments of a medieval monastic Grange. There are however, several difficulties in the acceptance of this view. In the first place, the meagre records of Slebech do not show the existence of a Grange at Minwere; on the contrary, the Commandery's temporal possessions in the parish of Minwere at the dissolution were not of sufficient importance or extent to demand all the paraphernalia of home farm, though there is mention of Minweir and of a mill there. It is also not easy to imagine a tithe barn divided throughout its length into basement and two floors.

Considerable analogies between the building at Minwear and the ruins called Bishop's walls at Llanrhaiadr y Nghimmerch Denbigh support the suggestion that the real purpose of the structure was a shelter for the bands of pilgrims, female as well as male making their painful way to and from St David's. The building would be divided into cubicles separated from each other by wooden partitions, and each lighted by its small loop. Minwear Pill probably represented the farthest point to which small sloops or flat bottomed boats going from ports in the Bristol Channel could proceed and after a few nights rest and a brief devotional service at dawn the pilgrims would be ferried over the river and pass through the Slebech Commandery demesne on their short walk to Haverford, where they would find themselves on the well trodden road to the cathedral city..

Researches conducted at the Public Record Office since the above remarks were written have practically resolved one of the points that have been advanced, namely, that the buildings at Minwere were not originally constructed for a tithe barn, whilst it is, of course, not impossible though highly improbable that the structure may have been used temporarily for that purpose directly after it was taken into the hands of the Crown officials. The entry on the Patent Roll of the sale of part of the Slebech Preceptory property, and of the lands that had belonged to other monastic houses in different parts of the country to Roger and Thomas Barlow enumerates briefly the different items of that property in Minwere and among these are included -omnes illas parcelas terrae nostras cum pertinentiis vocatur Systerne House, etc.

It is quite impossible to believe that the knights of Slebech would call a tithe barn by the name of Sisters' House, nor can we credit that there had existed at some time a branch of the Slebech house for females, which discretion and sense of propriety had placed on the other side of the Cleddau. The absence of the ordinary conveniences of settled life from the Minwear building is against the existence of a house of the Order for females. Until, therefore, it has been proved that the priory for knights of the Order of St John could have establishments for females affiliated to them, the suggestion that the ruins at Minwere are those of a hostel for female pilgrims to St Davids may be regarded as holding the field.

Education in Wales (The Blue Book) 1847 Parish of Minwere

Mr John Thomas , farmer, informed me that there is no day school nor any Sunday school of any kind in this parish, which is a small one. The farmers have their children educated either at Templeton, Narberth, Pembroke or Haverfordwest, and the children of such few labourers as live there are growing up without any education at all. The wages of labourers are 8d a day with food and 1s to 1s 2d without provisions; carpenters and masons 1s 6d to 1s 8d with provisions and from 2s to 2s 6d without provisions. Farm servants £4 to £8 a year and female servants £3 to £4. The people are in general very steady, industrious and sober. The respectable farmers in the parish can Read and write, so as to manage their own accounts and parish affairs.

The parish Church is without a roof and there is no no divine service performed there. The incumbent resides in Crespy near Picton Castle.

Priory Farm Cave Monkton

Evidence for the first presence of man in Pembrokeshire comes from the caves in the carboniferous limestone outcrops in the south. The caves around Tenby have produced limited series of flint impliments with the cold loving fauna of the upper Palaeolithic period; but the best group is that from the Cat's Hole at Monkton near Pembroke which demonstrates that the earliest hunting communities of South West Wales shared the Cresswellian culture which was characteristic of the cave people of most of southern Britain at this time

The prehistoric bones in the limestone caves in the south-east of Pembrokeshire have been beautifully preserved by the action of carbonate of lime. Caves at Caldy Island, at Hoyle's Mouth and Little Hoyle near Tenby, have yielded a rich store of animal bones: the collection covers the mammoth, woolly rhinoceros, hippopotamus, brown and cave bears, wolf, fox, hyena, lion, Irish elk, red deer, reindeer, wild ox, bison, horse, as well as the first domestic animals goat, pig and dog. These caves were the lairs, larders dens and last resting places of the earliest Man. Flint is no longer found naturally in Pembrokeshire but nevertheless thousands of flints have been discovered in or near the caves on Caldey, which must therefore date from before the inundation; they are of both old and new (Neolithic) stone age and were doubtless carried down by the north ice; these and other Pembrokeshire limestone caves show traces of occupation by man right down to Romano British times.

Old Stone Age

Palaeolithic Period Sea level over 100 mts lower so little trace of inhabitants remain hunters lived in caves such as Priory Farm Cave at Monkton. The earliest definitely identifiable remains of human occupation are found in association with the bones of prehistoric animals. Finds have been made in the Coygan Cave near Laugharne, Priory Cave at Monkton and in the Paviland Cave in the Gower peninsular, Hoyle's Mouth, Little Hoyle near Tenby and Nanna's Cave on Caldy

Ossiferous caves are situated in the south-eastern portion of the county, near Tenby. Hoyle's Mouth was the first of them to which attention was drawn; then its "little" neighbour in Longbury Bank was partially examined; the quarrymen on Caldy Island opened others; and lastly, the operations at Black Rock have disclosed a new series. Isolated ones have been found under the town of Tenby, and doubtless many sea caves, which are scoured by the tide, were in Pleistocene times wild beast dens, for mammoth bones are not infrequently met with on the shore. Last, though not least, Comes the Coygan, near Laugharne; though as this cave is in Carmarthenshire, it scarcely falls within our limits The Woogan, under Pembroke Castle, has not been hunted for Pleistocene relics.

Priory Farm cave / Cats Hole Cave

Mr E W Dixon and Dr A Hurrell Style first excavated in this cave in 1908 when a number of finds were made. Professor W F Grimes in his Guide to the Collection Illustrating The PreHistory of Wales (1939,) describes them thus:-

"A small but fine series of flints comes from a cave in the limestone at Cat's Hole Quarry Monkton, Pembroke

The cave penetrates over 120 feet into the rock, at a height of about 50ft above the present level of the river. It was excavated in 1908 and found to contain deposits at least 4 feet thick consisting of cave earth in two layers, with near the entrance an underlying band of gravel. Beneath the surface earth in the cave mouth were found a bronze saw, a chisel, and a fragmentary palstave, while there were kitchen middens and fragments of medieval Pottery indicating even later occupation. At the same level as the bronzes was a human skull of the typical Neolithic type. The animal remains found in the cave were much mixed and there was no difference between the two levels. They included especially, however reindeer, hyena, horse and mammoth. The flints were found in the gravel. Apart from worked flakes they consist of some fine examples of the developed Gravette point, associated with man of the Neolithic period, other examples were found the Paviland caves. The Monkton implements however more closely resemble those of the Cresswell Craggs caves in Derbyshire which at present are the type site for the industry, and provide really definite evidence for the existence in South Wales of the characteristic Cressweillian industry. The Monkton cave is at present the most westerly known to have been occupied by man." The find suggests colonies of men who were familiar with the flake implement technique. They would probably have been few in number and in the absence of flint suitable for their large tools seem to have developed more dependence on small flake tools.

The bronze age chisel found was of the simpler form with a tang which would have been driven into a wooden handle. The palstave was of an early bronze age type whilst the saw is of a type very rare. It was presumably designed to be used like a cross cut and was fitted with a bronze loop at one end and the other was bent over to take a cord.

The artifacts were deposited in the National Museum of Wales

Dry Barrows Tumuli --RCAM

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 89 S.E.; lat. 51° 39' 30'

Long. 4° 58' 0")

.According to earlier records there were an even larger group than at present

A group of at least six circular mounds, known as the Orielton Barrows (Burrows on the 6 in. Ord. sheet), about half a mile north-west of Orielton mansion; five are in one field, and one in the next field north of the high road. The largest has a base circumference of some 350 feet and a height of 10 feet; the remainder are slightly smaller. Five are grass-grown, and the sixth has been ploughed over, revealing a small quantity of White quartz stones.—visited, 23rd May, 1929.

—Fenton's account of this group is interesting He says:—" Dry Burrows, a furzy Moor covered with tumuli, the largest group I ever recollect to have seen in this county, as the spot never seems to have undergone cultivation Since those Sepulchral mounds were raised over the ashes of the heroes they cover. In a few of the fields near, which for ages have felt the influence of the plough, and are intersected by fences in different directions, several others, originally part of the same cluster before the land was enclosed and reclaimed, though now considerably lowered and softened down, are discoverable as if it had been the principal mausoleum of the early inhabitants of this country, it being very unusual in any other part of it to see so many together " (Tour, p. 392 1810).

A few months after the publication of Fenton's Tour containing the above extract the historian his son John Fenton wrote to his father an account of his excavation of the Orielton tumuli, of which the following is an extract:—

" 30th September, 1811. Opened one of the tumuli on Dry Barrows near Orielton discovered large and well-formed kist: cover stone 4 feet long. 3 feet wide and 6 inches thick depth 3 1/2 ft. human bones, partly burned - charcoal -

bits of coal

-- no weapon, urn, or any ornament found in this barrow. Field called Hangman field

1st October In another barrow no kist, but interment had been made in a most irregular manner Bones had been first burned on surface of natural soil, and afterwards collected in four different heaps -- immense quantities of charcoal , mixed with a much greater proportion of new and hard coal

5th October Opened the central tumulus --- urn reversed filled with bones and ashes deposited in a kist of clay not much larger than the urn

7th October Opened another tumulus ----- another reversed urn a little larger and more ornamental than former --- contained burned bones with some earth and charcoal -- Urn was 11 1/2 in. high 4in diameter at the base and 8 1/4 in at the top.

[Bronze Age --Coal found in Barrows]

Acc/to Professor Grimes

These barrows form the largest single concentration of Bronze Age burial mounds in the county in addition to the main group of seven there are several outliers in the neighbourhood. Several of them , not specified , were excavated in 1811 by John Fenton . An interesting feature is the mention of coal which is the first reference to coal in Pembrokeshire although it has been mentioned elsewhere. . The barrows lie beside the Ridgeway where it turns northwards to avoid broken country.

Corston Beacon

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 89 S.E.; lat. 51° 39' 32", Long.

A prominent tumulus standing on a field called Beacon Park about half a mile north-east of Corston House. It has a circumference of 90 feet, and a height of 6 feet. Its disturbance in the 1920's for road metal disclosed a construction of earth and stones. It is locally reported that when the disturbers came within sight of what appeared to be a cist operations were dropped.—in 1928 a fine Bronze Age burial cist was opened and found to contain the remains of a man of about 1600 BC with a bronze dagger by his side.

Penny Bridge

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 39 S.E.; lat. 51° 39' 43"; Long. 4° 57' 3P).

In the west corner of a triangular field, about 300 yards west of Penny Bridge farm-house, stood, until the early 1900's, a circle of stones not shown on the 6 in. Ord. sheet. 'the circle had been grubbed up when land-cleaning, before our Assist. Inspecting Officer heard of its existence. Upon his arrival at the site he found the twelve stones of which it was composed placed in a row against the hedge of the field. The tallest was 7 feet Long by 2 feet square; the rest were smaller. The circle ; had a diameter of some 30 feet, and occupied a slightly elevated position. So far as could be gathered no finds had been met with.—visited, 12th May, 1922.

Bowett Wood or Quoit's (?Cott's) Mill Camp

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 40 S.W.; lat. 51° 40' 7"; Long. 4° 56' 5").

An earthwork situate in Bowett Wood immediately above Bowett Bridge, on the boundary between this parish and that of Monkton; not marked on the 6 in. Ord. sheet. The defence on three sides consists of precipitous descents to a stream which empties itself into Quoits Pill, and to a dingle through which runs the high road from Monkton to Hundleton village. To the south an earthen bank cuts off approach, thus marking off an area measuring 200 feet east to west and 180 feet north to south, now nearly covered with trees. This bank is fairer perfect, it rises 6 feet and falls 10 feet to a ditch 15 feet wide. The entrance was at the west end.—visited, 17th May, 1922.

The Church of St Nicholas and St John Monkton

In 1098 Arnulph de Montgomery, who had invaded the area in 1093 and erected a fortification on what is now the site of Pembroke Castle, made a gift of the Church of St Nicholas "within his Castle" to the Benedictine Abbey of Seez in Normandy while half the tithes of his churches in Wales were to be devoted to provide footwear for its Monks at Seez the rest to go towards the support of the new site at Pembroke. Soon after this the monks started to build the Monastery on which, some evidence suggests, was the site of an earlier pre Norman settlement. As it was subservient to a foriegn Monastery it was regarded as an alien priory and thus had a very unsettled existence

These alien priories were cells of the religious houses in England which belonged to foreign Monasteries;

When manors or tithes were given to foreign convents, the monks, in order to have faithful stewards of their revenues, built a small convent and constituted priors over them. Within these convents there was the same distinction as in those priories which were cells subordinate to some great abbey. Some of these were conventual, and having priors of their own choosing, thereby became entire societies within themselves, and receive the revenues belonging to their several houses for their own use and benefit, paying only an acknowledgement to the foreign household but others depended entirely on the foreign houses, who appointed and removed their priors at pleasure. These transmitted all their revenues to the foreign houses to which they appertained, and on this account their estates were frequently seized to supply the means of carrying on the wars between England and France, and restored to them again on the return of peace..

The whole number of these institutions is not exactly known as but it has been ascertained that it exceeded one hundred. The alien priories were first seized by Edward I 1285, on the breaking out of war between France and England; and it appears, from the roll, that Edward II also seized them In 1337 Edward III confiscated their estates, and let out the priories themselves, with all their lands and tenements, at his pleasure, for twenty three years; at the end of which term peace was concluded between France and England He restored their estates 1361. At other times, he granted their lands, or pensions out of them, to several of his nobles. Their condition was not improved by the accession of Richard II and it was not until Henry IV began his reign that these priories experienced any royal favour. He restored all the conventional ones, only reserving to himself, in time of war, what they paid, in time of peace, to foreign abbeys. Their prosperity, however was not of Long duration; for they were all dissolved by act of parliament, in the second year of the reign of Henry V, and their estates were vested in the crown.

According to an Inventory of 1377 Pembroke Priory had three appropriated Churches
Castlemartin value £26 13 4d,

Monkton value £ 26 13 4d,

Pembroke St Michael's value £10 0 0d, assessed value for temporalities £19 6 3 1/2d - no figure given for spiritualities.

Attached to St Michaels Pembroke was , according to Fenton, a subordinate Chapel or hospitium dedicated to St Mary Magdalen, which was situated to the east of the Church outside the town walls. This hospital had an income of £1 6s 8d. There is also evidence that there was a leper house as land at Kingswood was let to the lepers in the inventory of 1326/7 (for the same pasture of the sheep of the lepers)

Accounts for Pembroke for the same year also show that there was a house of St John there on which no fees were paid

When the Alien priories were seized by the Crown in 1414, Monkton was granted to Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, who returned it to the Church by giving it to St Albans Abbey to which it belonged until the dissolution of the Monasteries.

The last prior was William Waren in 1534 and at that time the number at the priory consisted of the prior and three monks. After the dissolution he was one of those permitted to hold a benefice and wear his habit under that of a secular clerk. There is records which also show that he held the land which had belonged to St Daniel's Church.

The property of the Priory was sold by the Crown to John Vaughan and Katherine his wife in 1546.

1670 At this time only the nave of the Church had a roof on

According to the records of the Archdeaconry of St David's Episcopal Visitations in 1678 due to the failure of the tithe holders to carry out the maintenance of the chancel it had become in a very poor state of repair.

From 1770 until an Order in Council was granted on 5th February 1872 the vicarage of Monkton was united with the vicarages of St Michael's and St Mary's Pembroke. The combined livings at the time were valued at £40 and "Mouncton" Church is described as "down".

Fenton in 1810 said " The priory Church taking in the unroofed old chancel, or Virgin 's Chapel , making nearly half of the building , was of great length , and is a mixture of the Saxon and pointed order. The nave is vaulted with stone. The pointed arch that led to the unroofed part must have been stopped for some centuries, as it incorporates a monumental recess neatly wrought, to which were formerly affixed brasses of figures and Coats of arms, but Long since stripped off, now forming the back of the communion table. The Church is paved partly with the glazed bricks, having arms, mottos, and flowers on them as at St David's and Carew. The modern font is placed on the fragment of a beautiful clustered column, such as does not occur anywhere in the present edifice, so that there is reason to suppose the ancient Church, which appears to have been enriched with ornaments now not existing, has undergone much change.

This Church has long been the mausoleum of the family of the Owens, and probably of the Wyrriots , of Orielton, before them, as well as of the Meyricks of Bush, as we see the monuments of the first of the former who settled in this country, as well as of the latter.

In the unroofed Chapel there are four handsome windows on the south side and one in the east end. On each side there is a canopied recess as for a recumbent figure, but now untenanted; and on the right hand of the altar stone stalls of neat workmanship for two officiating priests.. Parallel to this on the north side is a building of similar dimensions, separated by an open passage and though now detached , a considerable building called by the common people the Monkey-house, was formerly connected with the nave of the Church, as may be clearly traced.

The prior's mansion, a little to the west of the cemetery, now converted into a farm house, is of singular form, uniting the architecture of various fashions and ages. It is ascended by a flight of steps, at the foot of which on each side are the remains of very curious pillars. The basement is all vaulted; and the outbuildings together with the walls that enclose the whole, give us an idea of the priors great state. The monastic precinct, or rather prior's liberties, occupying a very large tract, formed a paddock well walled round, commanding a fine view of the estuary, Castle and town of Pembroke, and must have been a sumptuous and delightful residence. A dove-house of large dimensions, an inseparable appendage to houses of the first note in this county, still exists entire just without this paddock”

The livings of the three parishes of St Mary , St Michael and St Nicholas were recorded in 1834 as being consolidated into one discharged vicarage , rated in the King's books at £9 (£4 for St Michael and £5 for that of Monkton. St Mary's not being in charge.) and in the gift of Sir John Owen Bart.

Up to the year 1834, the inhabitants of what is know Pembroke Dock had the "right" of 'burial in St Mary's Churchyard, Pembroke, but that place being very limited Monkton Churchyard (with the exception of a few buried at Bethany Chapel) became the burial ground. Monkton Churchyard contains by far the greater number of the 'honoured "dead of the early dockyard. On the west side of the churchyard they were laid side by side from the Churchyard gate up to the Church door, alongside the pathway. His Majesty King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra, on the 23rd Aug, 1902 visited Monkton Church and scanned some of the headstones whilst passing along this path. It may be interesting to record some of' the inscriptions:

To the memory of Mary the wife of Thomas Roberts, 'master' shipwright of His Majesty's Yard; Pembroke, who departed this life, 24th January, 1824. Aged 52 years

Sacred to the memory of William Calder, esq., late of H.M.Dockyard, Pembroke, who departed this life, 4th May, 1826 aged 62.

To the memory .of Elinor Burch, daughter of Thomas and Anne Burch, of Plymouth who departed this life, April 3rd 1819

One who was buried there in 1829 was Joseph King He had served on the “ Boreas” the Agamemnon and the “Captain” as Boatswain under Nelson and was recommended by him and the Earl of St Vincent to the post of Boatswain to the Dockyard of Gibraltar from December 9th 1796 to 1808. He then came to the Haven, first as Boatswain to the Dockyard at Milford then on its transfer to the Dockyard at Paterchurch . He had a son John Nesbit King who married Ann Gale.

In 1851 the Church of Monkton or St Nicholas (this was what is now the nave of the present Church) had a seating capacity of 52 of which two were free seats. The patron and impropiator of the parish was Sir John Owen Bart. and the tithes amounted to £475 of which £300 belonged to Sir John Owen and £175 to the Vicar. The consolidated parish had, besides the Vicar, two curates. One of which had a stipend of £110 the other £50. Two services were held each Sunday. Congregations for the morning service averaged 80 while the numbers fell to 60 for evensong

The northern side of the nave of the present Church supported outside by buttresses is the original wall of the nave of the ancient Church of St Nicholas.

When the Rev David Bowen , an architect (Deputy Provincial Grand Master Past G C of England Ancient Order of FreeMasons Loyal Welsh, Lodge of Wales Pembroke Dock) was appointed Vicar in 1877 the Church was partly in ruins and had been for some time. At that time the congregation worshipped in the nave, a drawing shows that the chancel and side Chapel were in ruins with no roof or windows and covered in vegetation. The first entry into the bank pass book for the Restoration fund was dated May 17th 1878 and the first faculty was granted in 1882 (2 Aug) for the restoration of the then Church.

During the restoration the floor level was lowered and levelled. This revealed that, like in many other churches, there had been numerous burials below the floor one of which, if the terms of his will of 1500 were carried out, was Richard Newton. The remains were collected and reinterred in a large grave by the north wall of the Churchyard. Two effigies were uncovered in the floor of the porch and these were later placed in recesses in the chancel and sanctuary. Whilst work was proceeding in the porch, the fine Norman arch was uncovered and a room above the porch was found and opened. This was found to contain the skeleton of a monk. The first part of the restored building was reopened on 8th December 1882 to a large congregation by the Lord Bishop of St David's who took as his text Coll III., 3-4. He was accompanied by Venerable Archdeacon Lewis. The collection of £21 14s 5d was given to the Restoration fund and after the service many paid 2s for lunch in the crypt of the Old Hall.(this would have been soon after its restoration by Mr Cobb). The Bishop also baptised the son Walter Mark, of Captain Walter Hoare and his wife Edith Mary .

Contributions for the lunch had been provided by Mrs Bowen , Mrs Leach, Mrs George, Mrs Russel, Yerbeston; Mrs Hitchen, Iveston; Mrs Lloyd , Goldboro; Mrs Sweet, Mellaston; Miss Thomas , Moorston; Miss Evans, Castleton;

The pulpit for the Church was donated by Mrs Bowen ; the font, Mr and Mrs Hurlow; reading desk, Mr George Lewis; lectern, Anon friend; book stand for the Holy Table, W O Hum esq.; bible, Miss Bryages; bible, Mrs Hird; two prayer books for the holy table, Mrs Robert George; prayer book for reading desk, Mrs Ada George; bible for the pulpit, Master Howard Penney; book markers, Miss Peard; gas standards, Rev T G Cree; cushion for the pulpit, Mrs Williams, Salutation; two offertory basins, Miss Mary Hurlow, font bucket (oak with brass mounts), Miss Hester Hurlow. The west window was installed at the expense of M.A. Saurin of Orielton. The cost of renovating the nave was £400 and the work was carried out by Mr Mc Alpin of Pembroke Dock. The Organ was built and erected by Messrs Wade and Meggit, Tenby.

Acc to RCAM (1922)

The present parish Church of Monkton was formerly the Church of St Nicholas originally founded by Arnold de Montgomery within his Castle of Pembroke, and annexed by him to the Norman abbey of Seez doubtless on the condition that the abbey should establish a subordinate house on or near the same site. Slight traces of Norman work incorporated within the present priory or found built into its walls point to its erection during the lifetime of Arnold or soon after his death; but, with the exception of the lines of the exterior walls, the existing building has suffered such extensive demolitions at, and since the dissolution of the lesser of the lesser Monasteries, and even more extensive restoration within the past half century, that it is difficult to be sure of the periods to which its component parts.

It was carefully examined and described by the late Professor E A Freeman a few years before its restoration (Arch Camb 1852 II iii 181). The professor refers to the "vast length of the nave , and the noble, though melancholy aspect of the ruined choir"

Like many Benedictine monastic churches, the nave was used , probably from the first, as the parish Church of Pembroke, whilst the chancel was walled off for the exclusive use by the monks; hence in 1535 the former part lived on uninjured whilst the latter portion was stripped of its roof and left to become a total ruin. It is now largely a modern Church.

At a meeting held after the Easter Vestry in 1883 it was agreed to level all the unmarked graves in the Churchyard.

A second faculty was granted in 1887 (21 April) for enlarging the Church The restoration work involved rebuilding the chancel and side Chapel, making the Church nearly half as long again, removing the dividing wall between the old nave and the ruined chancel. A new east window was installed to commemorate the Royal visit and new choir stalls with canopies, some of which were donated by Masonic lodges Throughout South Wales, were carved and erected by Mr Edwin Thomas of St David's.

The Masonic Lodges also gave the stain glass windows in the Chapel. Much of the stone carving was done by a local Mason Mr Chas Henry Williams of 4 Charlton Place Pembroke Dock. He also carved the pulpit in St John's Pembroke Dock, the South African War Memorial in Carmarthen and work in St Patrick's Church Pennar.

In this Church are the vaults of the Meyricks' or Bush; of the Owen's' of Orielton; and the Corston family. One under the tower arch is inscribed as that of Thomas Meyrike, Knt.. and is of the time of James 1st on the side of it are a number of figures wearing trunk-hose

The monuments raised to the memory of the original family of Owen's of Orielton are numerous, and some era of a good age. They are placed in the north wall; the upper one cannot be deciphered with accuracy now as the letters were not cut in the stone but were painted in gold paint.

There is a nice tablet - to the memory of Abraham Leach, of Corston, esq... a magistrate and deputy Lordly Lieutenant of this county, who died March 29, 1843, aged 79 years," and one in memory of John Frederick; Leach, esq. a Barrister-at-Law, who died March 13th, 1843, aged 31.

The tower was restored in 1887 at a cost of £80 the work being carried out by Mr John Phillips, for Mr McAplin Builder Pembroke Dock

The Church was visited by King Edward VII and Queen Alexandra on Saturday 23rd 1902 but according to a local paper, for some reason it is believed the Rev David Bowen was absent that day and so did not meet the Royal party.

On September 17th 1909 a faculty was granted for the erection of a churchyard cross in the parish churchyard.

During the clearing away of some of the remains of Monkton Priory a metal seal was found The inscription reads " SIGILLU': PRIOR: PROVICALIS: ANGLIE: ORDINIS: FRATRU': PREDICATORUM; its date is about 1500 and it is in the Tenby Museum.

Also a stone vessel described as a domestic mortar of medieval date was found in ground adjoining the Priory Church. Height 10ins, outside dia. 18ins, interior dia,13ins; with a heavy lug at each of the four corners of this ancient Church, which at times were combined with those of St Mary's Pembroke, go back to 1711 but fortunately some of the Bishops transcripts from as early as 1685 still survive.

There was once, according to legend, a passage from the priory to the Castle, but the sites entrance and exit have been lost. (In fact according to one very reliable history of the area the entrance site is where a large bush stands in the vicarage garden and the passage was last partly walked in the late 1800's by the Davies brothers, one of whom later helped with the exploration of the Priory Cave.)

The Monastery or Monks house which was known locally as the Monkey House has completely disappeared. It used to be where the Vicarage now stands. It had in it curious stone steps, a vaulted roof and at one time twelve stone statues of the apostles in niches in the walls. All these historical treasures were lost when it was taken down to build "the barn" attached to Priory farm.

When the Vicarage was built, there was deposited on June 14th 1893 in a cavity in the North East Foundation Stone a bottle containing a small piece of parchment with the following names written on it -- Archbishop of Canturbury, Dr Benson; Bishop of St David's Dr Basil Jones; Vicar of Monkton, Rev David Bowen . This bottle was sealed with an impression of the original seal of the Benedictine Prior.

Monkton Old Hall

Acc to RCAM

About 100yds south-east of the Benedictine Priory Church of Monkton is a building which, though some what drastically renovated in recent years, still preserves in its restored features many of the characteristics of a small residence of the 15th, or even as is claimed of the 14th century. By the latter half of the 19th century its internal arrangements had become a heap of ruins, so that the account given in 1868 bt the Rev E L Barnwell in Arch Camb III xiv 70 is incomplete, and the illustration of the exterior which he appends is far from presenting an adequate idea of its outward appearance. Some years later (1879) when it was leased by Mr J R Cobb F.S.A. the slated roof, which had been probably replaced in 1819 as some of the timbers bore that date, had fallen in as had the vault of the porch and that of the north east wing. An elder tree 7 1/2 inches in diameter was growing in the chimney. According to his discription, after the rubble had been cleared, the building consisted of a Long low vaulted Hall of three bays the eastern bay having a vaulted porch This low vaulted Hall was, in his opinion, the oldest part of the building being cut into the limestone rock. Over the middle and western bay there is another Hall with an external staircase with a fireplace and a slender Pembrokeshire stack. The north east limb consisted of kitchen with plain barrel vault built on the eastern bay of the main building and having a large fireplace with another room above. There was also fragmentary remains of a north western limb built on to the western bay. Cobb compared the design of the building with that of the Hostelry of the Prior of St Pancras, Southwark described in "Domestic Architecture of the Middle Ages vol 1 Page 50".

Priory Farm

was, according to Fenton, once the Prior's mansion, it has been very much restored but the corbels high on the front indicating parts are medieval.

St Nicholas Well

This is the name given to a large spring at the end of Watery Lane now enclosed within a modern conduit. It is said to have formerly supplied water to Pembroke Castle through pipes of earthenware and lead. One of the former was built into the boundary wall of Monkton Council school and one of the latter is preserved in Tenby Museum.

Acc/to The Description of Pembrokeshire by George Owen (1603) There was a small Fair at Monkton near Pembroke on both Holy Rood Days Later records suggest that fairs were held on May 4th and September 25th but gradually, probably because the Parish was consolidated with that of Pembroke St Mary's and St Michael's, these fell into disuse.

Monkton Independent Chapel

Ebenezer --- A Chapel was built in 1845 which was used for a Sunday School and for occasional services. In 1851 it is recorded that no services were held there but occasionally the Minister of Tabernacle or one of the members would conduct a service. It was a branch of Tabernacle Pembroke and any records would be linked to that Chapel.

Thomas Merryman , labourer informed me that a labourer's wages with food are from 8d to 9d a day, and without from 7s to 8s a week; farm servants from £6 to £10., and female servants from £2 to £6 per year. Labourers have not the means to get drunk otherwise some of them would. They suffer severely from the failure of the potato crop this year. The slight advance in wages is nothing to be compared to this loss. Most of the farmers are able to Read and write. Still many children and labourers are without education

Mr William Thomas 's school - This school is kept upstairs in two rooms of the master's house which is in good repair except the windows. There is a door to each room from the landing at the top of the stairs, but the master cannot see all the scholars from one room while they are in the other. He generally sits with the elementary classes.

The furniture consists of one Masters desk, two Long desks and twelve benches., no maps, prints, nor cards of any description.

The master, who seemed to be well informed, had been for 10 years conducting the National school at Tenby. He devotes his whole time to his school ; his wife sells Bread.

The scholars are tradesmen's mechanics, and a few labourers children; but the inclement weather prevented many from attending.

Dec.15th 1846

At the time the parishes of St Michael's St Mary's and St Nicholas where united. The borough of Pembroke included all these parishes which covered the whole area of Pater. Apart from Pater where there was an excellent National school owing partly to the influence and proximity of the Dockyard , the only school of public institution for the poor was the National school . This was held in a house in the town, hired for the purpose, which is also used as a savings bank . Over 200 children of both sexes attend the school which is supported by subscription. There had been since 1690 endowment for a free grammar school founded then but at this time the sum amounted to £11 3s 4d a year, just a little above a farm servants wage.

It was estimated that upwards of 500 children were without even a nominal education. The Sunday schools were few and worse attended. This inferiority would particularly apply to that part of Pembroke and its vicinity which lies in Monkton parish to the south and west.

Monkton Mixed School.

This school was built as a British school in the year 1865,- and has been improved several times since that date. An infants school was built on part of the play-ground in 1875, but latterly has been abandoned for infant teaching, and fitted up for teaching ecology The school is situated on the corner of Monkton Terrace at the commencement of the road leading to Norgans Hill. [it will accommodate 186. The average attendance in 1904 was 201 This school has always been popular with the whole of Pembroke, and in years gone by, children from the east would pass their own school to attend this one, a circumstance which often created a difficulty for the School Board to secure a different arrangement The headmaster (of many years standing) is Mr W James. Mr. R. Owell is the assistant master, and Miss C Treharne is the assistant mistress.

In 1873 The Pembroke and Pembroke Dock School Board took over Monkton Pembroke British school enforcing attendance at this elementary School.

Infants School Monkton.

This school is situated in a space on- the north side of the Main Street ,running through Monkton, westward. It was built in 1898 and will accomodate 350. The average attendance in 1904 totals 130. The headmistress is Miss F. M. Logan, and the Misses C. L. Thomas , S. A. KenniFord and M. G. Norris are the assistant mistresses

In 1883 as well as rebuilding work being carried out in connection with the Church, work was also undertaken on a school room This was completed by the extending of the boundary wall by 20 feet, lengthening the main Hall and erecting a dwarf wall with iron railings at the front. There was a thriving Sunday School and that year the Sunday School treat was held at Orielton on July 17th by kind permission of M.A. Saurin esq. who provided one of the conveyances to take the younger children. The elder ones had to walk lead by the school band. The event finished at 7.30 pm when the drummer sounded the “alarm” and as the children marched out of the field each was presented with two buns. The Church was reached about nine and after a few words from the Vicar and the singing of the National Anthem the children dispersed to their homes.

On the morrow, the robber came to the Castle of Lanwadein, before David, the diocesan Bishop, and Gerald and his colleague, Master Michael, whom the archbishop had attached to him, who had gone there, restitution having been made and satisfaction given, when he was beaten with rods, he was to be absolved'.

Henry IV issued a writ of protection to Pembroke Priory (Episc Acts pp247,254,255)

Henry by the Grace of God King. etc. to all whom the present letters shall come, greeting. Know that we inwardly considering how some alien priories, houses and religious places being within our realm of England and Wales were laudably founded and built by our noble progenitors and other nobles and magnates of our realm to do and maintain divine offices and works of hospitality and alms and other works of piety and devotion, and that the same priories and religious places, as well by sudden and frequent removals and expulsions of the priors and occupiers of the places aforesaid as by divers secular and other farmers after they were that they were first taken into the hand of Sir Edward, late King of England, our grandfather (Edward III), by occasion of the war between us and those of France, are so above measure destroyed, dilapidated and wasted as well in houses as in things and possessions that the divine worship and regular observances therein are at an end, and hospitalities and alms and other works of charity besides, of old established and accustomed to be done there are withdrawn, and also the pious vows of the founders are in manifold ways defrauded and frustrated to no small offence and displeasure of Almighty God, as we believe. And it being our will therefore to the glory of God and holy Church to provide more graciously for the increase of divine worship and the renewal and continuance of the said works of charity and other works incumbent, we of our especial Grace, of our certain knowledge and with the assent of our council in our present parliament have granted and by the tenour of these presents have restored to the abbot and convent of St Martin, Sees of the power of France, the advowsons of all their conventual and other priories to which priors have been accustomed of ancient time to be admitted, instituted and inducted, in our realm of England and elsewhere within our lordship and power being, and taken and seized into our hand by occasion of the war aforesaid, and we remove our hand from the advowsons aforesaid; to have and to hold to them and their successors, so that the same abbot and his successors aforesaid shall henceforth present fit persons to the priories aforesaid in all avoidance of the same, the seisin thereof aforesaid or any other seisin in our hand or the hand of our aforesaid grandfather or of Richard, late King of England, by the occasion of the war aforesaid, made before these times, or any ordinances published to the contrary, notwithstanding; saving nevertheless to us and our heirs and other chief lords the services due therefrom, and further saving the right of any other person whatsoever. In witness etc. we have caused these our letters patent to be made. Witness myself at Westminster, 15th November in the first year of our reign (1399) By K.

1648 Peregrine Phillip Vicar of Monkton during the Civil War.
 Acc/to J T Rees " History of Protestant Nonconformity in Wales" (1861) the Oxford-educated Phillips, the son of a vicar of Amroth, was appointed to the Llangwm living after briefly serving as his uncles curate at Kidwelly. Pluralism was very common, and with the backing of such gentlemen as Sir Hugh Owen, Sir Roger Lort and Sir John Meyrick, he was soon preferred first to Monkton, then to Cosheston and Pembroke St Mary's. When Cromwell placed a battery, in his garden with the aim of bombarding the Castle Rev Phillips hid his flour in the bolster of his bed to save it from the hungry Roundheads who were searching for food. He was invited to preach before Oliver Cromwell and his troops during the siege of Pembroke (1648) probably on Sunday July 16 1648 and he so impressed the future Protector that he was invited aboard the men-of-war about to undertake the Irish campaign. During the Protectorate Phillips became widely known as a committed advocate of the governments religious policy. A very accomplished orator, hailed by many as the best in the county , he preached in almost every Church English and Welsh, and before the Justices of the Assizes at Cardigan, Haverfordwest and Carmarthen. He must have relinquished his Pembroke incumbency when the parishes of Llangwm, Freystrop and Rosemarket were united (July 1656). Peregrine Phillips continued to be very active as an open-air preacher and public Evangelist until he fell foul of the Act of Uniformity (1662) which banned all acts of worship not conducted in accordance with the Book of Common Prayer.

Upon his death at 68 years of age in September 1692, this unforgettable former rector of Llangwm, Cosheston and vicar of Monkton and St Mary's Pembroke was buried near the pulpit at Haroldston Church.

Monington

1839 Monington Lewis Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Monington, a parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Cardigan; containing 127 inhabitants. This place was by the Welsh called Eglwys Wythwr, signifying literally "the Church of eight men," there being at the time of its foundation precisely that number of freeholders in the parish. It comprises but a moderate area, which is all inclosed and in a good state of cultivation; the surrounding scenery is not distinguished by any peculiar features, but the views from the higher grounds embrace some objects of interest. The living is a vicarage not in charge, united to the living of St. Dogmael's: the tithes have been commuted for £80, of which £45 are payable to the impropiator, and £35 to the vicar. The Church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is situated at the southwestern declivity of a lofty eminence.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Nicholas Royal Commission of Ancient Monuments

The present building, consisting of chancel, small nave and single Bell-cote, contains nothing of antiquarian interest – visited 29th July 1914

The Church Warden's presentation of the year 1684 makes reference to the structure and fittings of the building which preceded the present one : “ The Church is in good repair, with cleanliness as becomes the house of God, saving yt the steeple is out of repair. A font with a good cover to it; a pulpit; but there is not a Bible of the last translation; we have a Welsh Testament, a Book of Common Prayer and a book of homily, both in Welsh. No vicarage , nor glebe lands”.

Sites of Interest – Royal Commission of Ancient Monuments

An almost circular work situated at the meeting point of the three parishes of Monington, Moylgrove and St Dogmaels. It occupies a strong natural position above the Trewyddel brook. The enclosed rampart is practically undisturbed, rising on the south to a height of 10ft, and falling 18ft to the bottom of a ditch which is much obscured by vegetation. The interior has a length of 300ft from North to south and a width of 160 ft. The entrance is to the north east, where the rampart falls gently to the level. Its width is 20ft. In the south of the enclosure, close to the rampart, is a depression, which may be a hut circle or shelter. The field is known as Castell. Caerau, in the st Dogmael's parish is about half a mile distant to the north. --- visited 11th June 1914.

Parc y Gromlech

A field near Oen rhiw house half a mile north east of Monington parish Church. The name is in common local use, although no traces remain of the cromlech which must have given rise to the designation, the second field to the south is called Parc yr arian, for which no explanation is forthcoming –visited 24th July 1914.

Maen Saeson

This is the name of a farm in the north of the pariash. In 1899 the editor of the Pem Arch Survey could not find or hear of the maenhir to which the name applies; it was probably destroyed when the farm house was built about the middle of the last century visited July 1914

Mounton,

"Mounton, or Monkton, a parish in the hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, SOUTH WALES, 2 miles (W.S.W.) from Narberth, containing 41 inhabitants. This place, which is situated in the south-eastern part of the county, and near the source of a small rivulet which flows into the eastern Cleddy, is but of small extent. The parish comprises a large portion of woodland, called Canaston wood, together with some good arable and pasture land, which is enclosed and cultivated. The living is consolidated with the rectory of Narberth, to which the Church is now considered a Chapel of ease, and is in the arch deaconry and diocese of St Davids. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £8. 9." [From A Topographical Dictionary of Wales (S. Lewis, 1833).]

RCAM 1914 Mounton Chapel

This small edifice consists of a chancel 15ft by 18 ft and a nave 25ft by 18ft, having originally no structural division, though a wall pierced by a plain pointed arch has been inserted at a later date; there are also a west porch and a single Bell-cote over the western gable. In the chancel is a small lancet window, now blocked; north of the altar is a recess having a pointed head and rude stone ledge; in the north wall is a plain square recess. A tie beam above the chancel arch is inscribed W.C. 1748 C.W., the year when the building was renovated and the division between the chancel and nave effected. A small west gallery was removed. The roof and windows are modern. There is no font. The altar table is a small square of grey marble on a wooden frame – visited 6th May 1914

This Chapel is not named in the Valor Eccl of 1533, but there is no doubt it was in existence before the Reformation. It was probably built to serve the upland portion of the original parish of Narberth lying in the south west of the Castle and vill of Narberth known as Narberth Mountain, the mountain pasture of the lordship; it was accounted for to the Lord by the proposition of Moleston foreign which was administered under the Welsh tenure. This sub manor formed part of the grant of Pembrokeshire Crown lands to John Barlow in 4th Charles I

Acc/to The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Salter 1994.

The neglected single chamber of the 13c or 14c has a west porch. It was remodelled in the 18c, one chancel beam being dated 1743.

Of medieval origin; it became a Chapel of ease and was in use and repair until 1948. Built in the Vernacular and Simple Gothic style, gable entry type. Disused (redundant and in poor condition).

There is no drain. It stands on a modern square base of brick. The date is uncertain, but it may safely be pronounced to be post Reformation, and it is probably a local production of the 18th century. visited 20th October 1914.

Morvil (S. John the Baptist). —This parish retains its Elizabethan Chalice and Paten cover.

There are two bands round the bowl, the upper of which, close to the Lip, interlaces four times and encloses the usual woodbine foliation. Within the lower band is the following inscription "

POCVLVM ECLESIE DE MORVILL". Between each word is a graceful spray of foliage ornamentation. The knop on the stem is decorated with intermittent lines. The usual band of ornamental moulding beneath the bowl and on the base is absent. The Paten cover is quite void of all embellishment but On its handle or foot is engraved the date " 1574". There are no Hall marks on the Chalice but on its cover appears the small black letter 'r' for 1574, the leopard's head crowned, the lion passant, and the maker's mark A H in a plain oblong stamp. A Chalice and Paten cover by the same maker are found in Lympley Stoke, Wiltshire, dated 1577.

Cross Incised Stone

In the Church yard is an erect stone having on the east face a small plain cross within a circle 6 ½ in in diameter. The circle is rudely formed and the cross arms are plain lines drawn from the centre to the circumference. The lower perpendicular arm is continued down the stem for a distance of 3 ½ ins beyond the circle. The terminals are not expanded or ornamented. The stone itself has a height above ground of 34 in, with a width of 15 ins and a depth of 11 in. - It has been used as a gatepost.

Maen Morvil

In the churchyard is an erect stone ,which is known locally by the name maen Morvil. It presents the appearance of having been intended for a small wheel cross, but left unfinished. The stone stands 50in above the ground. From a width of 19in at the top it gradually widens to 28in, and again contracts to 15in at mid height from which it widens out to its base. It has an average thickness of 12 in – visited 20th October 1914.

Castell RCAM

The Ord Survey maps indicate the site of an earthwork marked “Castell” on Mynydd Morvil, just above the pass known as Bwlch wyniad. No certain trace of this construction can now be made out, the mountain being heavily clothed with undergrowth. Above twenty years ago the Pem Arch Survey reported of the antiquity “So little of the earthwork now remains that its dimensions could not be traced. There appears to be the remains of a small cairn within the lines of the enclosure”. The word “Castell” is still used by the natives for this wild tract, and local tradition speaks of a battle having been fought here. The site is probably the scene of a sharp skirmish between Martin de Turribus and the Welsh which took place at or near Morvil a few days after the landing of Martin at Abergwaun or Fishguard, when the natives were repulsed and pursued by the Normans at Abergwaun across the Prescelly hills – visited 20th October 1914 – Fenton Tour p522

However a 60m-diameter semi circular enclosure bank, with traces of a ditch is visible some 100m to the south. Remains of medieval settlement elements to the east have been linked to it, but this may be an Iron Age defended enclosure, possibly the one said to have held the remains of a small cairn in about 1900. Local tradition speaks of a battle having been fought here

1839 Moylegrove Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

Moylegrove, a parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Cardigan; containing 453 inhabitants. This parish, which by the Welsh is called "Trê-Wyddel," is situated on the coast, in the north-eastern part of the county, and comprises a moderate extent of arable and pasture land, all inclosed and cultivated. The scenery is not characterised by any peculiar features, and the s over the adjacent country are destitute of interest. In general the shore is abrupt and rugged, with a good depth of water. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the discharged vicarage of Bayvill, and endowed with £600 royal bounty. The Church, dedicated to St. Andrew, stands about a quarter of a mile from the village, on the left bank of a stream which falls into the sea at no great distance: it is not remarkable for any architectural details. There is a place of worship for Independents, in which a Sunday school is also held. Near the sea, on Treriffith farm, is a well termed in Welsh "Fynnon Alem," and in English "Alem's Well;" the water is a strong chalybeate, and is considered efficacious in several diseases.

Remains of an iron age camp and a Bronze age burial mound.

Set deep in the valley which runs out to the coast at Ceibwr, the village is full of character. The architecture is a mixture of ancient and modern. So many of the cottages are holiday homes that the village almost dies in the Winter. Celbwr is a pretty bay, but there is no sandy beach and very little parking.

Matilda, daughter of a Welsh Chieftain owned 230 acres of land, here she married Robert Fitz Martin of Nevern, and the village is said to be named after her.

Nearby Ceibwr Bay ships used to discharge cargoes of Lime and culm and contraband.

The Pembrokeshire Coast National Park by Dillwyn Miles.

This village of a few cottages and two Chapels lies deep in a valley. Its name first appears as "grava Matildis", the grove of Matilda, who was the wife of Robert Fitzmartin, the Norman invader of Cemaes.

A Chalice, Credence Paten and Flagon of electro-plate, each piece having the sacred monogram engraved within a rayed circle and inscribed " From Miss Phillipps To Moylgrove 1883".

The parish also possesses an old pewter Plate and a pair of small pewter Candlesticks. The plate is stamped with the name french with a fleur-de-ljrs beneath. A London pewterer, John French, flourished about the year 1687, but a harp and not a fleur-de-lys is given as his Mark.

Caerau, Moylgrove

Caerau is a multivallate - many walled - later Prehistoric type settlement enclosure occupying the brow of a prominent south-west facing Hill spur overlooking the Moylgrove valley. Several slab-lined graves were discovered here in the nineteenth century and the site was subject to partial geophysical survey in 1989.

The enclosure is defined by three roughly concentric rings of greatly degraded ramparts, now mostly reduced to scarps, with 10-30m intervals. The inner encloses an area of 0.7ha and the outermost 2.3ha. There are some indications of a south-west facing entrance. The geophysical survey identified the ramparts as 5.0-5.5m wide bands with only slight indications of ditches. It seems likely that these were massive drystone walls.

The grave reported in 1864 lay between the second and third rampart on the east side. The earlier finds appear to have been made to the north, south and east of this spot. One grave contained a hammer and cutlass. Burials such as these are characteristic of the late Roman to early Medieval period. They might represent a re-use of an earlier settlement site or else have been contemporary with its use. Sources: Vincent in Archaeologia Cambrensis 3rd series 10 (1864), 299-306

Mynachlogddu.

In Preselly's surrounded by bleak Moorland, a pastoral community once belonging to St Dogmaels. A little hamlet in the heart of the Presely Hills, surrounded by bleak Moorlands, forestry plantations and stony barren hills. Above the hamlet are the rocky cracts of Carn Meini (the supposed source of the Stonehenge bluestones, and a little way to the west is the simple memorial to Waldo Williams, one of Pembrokeshire's best known Welsh poets.

We approach Monachlogddu, the landscape assumes a thoroughly Welsh appearance. A clear trout-stream, that comes rippling and dancing down the glen from the dark brown ridge of the Moorlands, is here put to turn the wheel of a little flannel-mill. In response to our request, the good man describes in broken English the simple processes of manufacture, and explains the movements of his archaic machinery. Then, after a glance at the lowly parish Church, dedicated to St. Dogmael, we bid adieu to the village of the Black Monastery, and take to the road.

1839 Mynachlogdû (Monachlog-dû Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis Mynachlogdû (Monachlog-dû), a parish, in the union of Narberth, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 10 miles (N. by E. from Narberth; containing 487 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the eastern side of the county, bordering upon Carmarthenshire, and is bounded on the north by the parishes of LlanvairNantgwyn, Whitechurch, and Meliney; on the east by those of Llanvyrnach and Llanglydwen; on the south by Llandissilio; and on the west by Llangolman. It contains by computation an area of 4050 acres, of which 1850 are arable, 400 pasture, and 1800 mountainous and boggy, with little or no woodland. A great portion is occupied by part of the Percelly mountain; the remainder is inclosed, the soil being light, and producing crops of barley and oats, but no wheat. There are two slate-quarries, two mills, and a small woollen manufactory. The Eastern Cleddy river has its source here, and is joined at the extremity of the parish by two brooks named Glandy and Wern. The living is a curacy, endowed with £1000 royal bounty; present net income, £180; patron, Lord Milford : the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £52. 10., payable to the curate. The Church, dedicated to St. Dogmael, and situated at the extremity of the parish, was once connected with a Monastery, and is capable of containing 2000 persons, but without seats: it is not remarkable for any architectural details, and has been left in a very neglected state. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and two Sunday schools are held, one of them by the Baptists in their meeting-house, and the other by the Independents in a farmhouse.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Dogmael. RCAM

This Church was appropriated to the Benedictine priory of St Dogmael; hence its name of Mynachlog Ddu, the Church of the Monastery of Black Monks. In the taxatio of 1291 it is described as Capella de Nigra Grangea. It consists of nave 35ft by 14ft and north aisle 38ft by 12 ¾ ft; there is no structural division between nave and chancel.the roof, windows and much of the walls are modern on consequent upon a thorough restoration in the year 1889. The aisle is divided from the nave by an arcade of three bays, with plain masonry piers; the arches are plain pointed. In the north wall of the aisle is a low doorway 2 ½ ft wide, 4 ¾ ft to the spring of the arch and 5 ¾ ft to the crown. The doorway at the west end of the nave has a similarly pointed arch. On either side of the communion Table at a height of 2ft from the ground is a corbel or bracket probably of 14th century date to which the nave in its original state belonged , the north aisle being a century later. At the east end is a plain aumbry. The font measures 22 ½ in bt 19 ½ in externally and 17 in by 15 in internally; it is plain, and chamfers off to a modern base –visited 7th June 1915.

George Owen in his list of churches – most of them in ruins – in connection with which the remembrance of pilgrimage survived in his day, mentions the name of two in this parish called respectively Capel Cawey and capel St Silin or Giles. The Pem. Arc. Survey visitors “could find no trace of the old Grange where there was a Chapel of St Giles. The only suggestion of antiquity was an old foundation at the back of a small cottage, now used as a store room close to the gate of the churchyard. This foundation may, however , have been merely that of an old hedge”. Our Inspector was equally unsuccessful.

There is no resident Clergy. It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 6d to 8d a day with food and 1s a day on their own finding. The moral character is regarded as good. There is no resident land proprietor or day school provision for education of the poor . Many of the population cannot read or write.

At Cwm-isaf is a former water-powered woollen factory. The two-storey stone building has an overshot waterwheel on its eastern gable, 3.658m (12ft) diameter and 1.118m (3ft 8in) wide over shrouds, marked "D. Davies PENRALLT". Although now devoid of any internal machinery, except for a short length of line shafting and some belt pulleys, the factory was apparently in use as recently as the 1950s. The water supply leat was some 170m long, taking water from the Afon Wern. Adjacent to the building on the east side was a sawmill, presumably powered by the waterwheel, now demolished except for the north wall. B.A.Malaws, RCAHMW, 19 April 2011.

The internal pit wheel meshed with a bevelled stone nut which drove a single pair of millstones from below. The mill is shown as working on the 1889 and 1907 Ordnance Survey 25in maps but it is not known when it went out of use.

Sites of Interest

Carn Meini site of Blue stones

memorial to Waldo Williams (Welsh Poet)

Croes Mihangel Tumulus

All that remains of this tumulus is the base, which has itself been so much disturbed as to make it difficult to trace the outline of the mound in the growth under which it is hidden. The tumulus doubtless derives its appellation of the "Croes" from a wayward cross which may have stood on or near the spot, and the suggestion is strengthened by the fact that the parish boundary passes over the site –visited, 22nd September 1914

Crug yr Hwch

Faint traces remain of this mound, which stood on the summit of the mountain land still known as Crug yr hwch, just above the 1000ft contour line. The Parish boundary passes over the site – visited 9th June 1915

Crugiau Dwy

This is the name given to two cairns which are placed on an outlying southern spur of the Prescelly range, the highest point of which is known as Mynydd Crugain Dwy. The more southerly cairn is actually within the parish of Llanfyrnach, The border fence passes between the Mounds. Within recent years both of these monuments have been robbed of much of their contents for road metalling. Their circumference at the base measures about 300ft. They are composed of small sized mountain gathered stones, though larger boulders may have been carried away. – visited 9th June 1915.

Mountain Cromlech.

When perfect this cromlech must have been a fine example of its class. Five supports remain, four being prostrate and one leaning slightly over. The capstone is about 12ft in length; is partially concealed by a hedge which is carried over it. The remains stand in the centre of a low mound having a base circumference of some 270ft; but it is not clear whether the cromlech was wholly or partially covered or merely stood upon the mound. It is asserted that this object of antiquity, which is known locally as Mountain Cromlech from the farm of that name, was deliberately destroyed. --visited 22nd September 1914.

Carn Arthur Bedd Arthur RCAM

Both are natural outcrops of rock and of interest so Ley because of the name attached to the spot. Carn Arthur is also known as Coitan Arthur which is said to have been hurled by the King from Dyffryn, in Henry's moat parish, where is a circle. Bedd Arthur is on the southern edge of the ancient trackway along the summit of the Prescelly Hills which cross the north of this parish from east to west –visited 22nd September 1914.

The stones of the sons of Arthur

Two erect stones standing 30ft apart, about 150 yds south east of Ty newydd farm house in Cwm Cerwyn. They have a height above the ground of 75 and 80 in. – visited 24th September 1914.

Capel Bach

In Cwm Cerwyn are the grass grown foundations of a building 35ft long by 20ft broad, traditionally said to have been a Chapel. The site is orientated. A break in the lines of foundations probably marks a north doorway. Built into the wall of the neighbouring cottage called Capel Bach, is a fragment 30in by 11in of the head of a two lighted trefoil window, which was discovered some years ago at the east end of the foundations –visited 24th September 1914 – This may have been the Chapel known to George Owen as Capel Cawey the latter word standing for Cerwyn.

Waun Lwyd Standing Stones.

Two erect stones 20ft apart, on the eastern boundary of Waun lwyd. They stand south-west and north-east and are 7ft and 9ft high respectively. On the same field Gwerglodd y maen are two other prostrate stones, in the line with those still standing; no remembrance or tradition exists that they have ever been erect. The position of the four stones suggests an alignment, but there are numerous mountain boulders in the vicinity. The next field to the south is known as Parc y maen – visited 9th June 1915.

Gors Fawr Circle

The following is extracted from a special survey of this monument made by Lieut Col. Morgan R.E. F.S. A., an Ex commissioner:- This collection of standing stones consists of a circle and two outstanding meini hirion, which are planted on a dreary common at the foot of the Prescelly Hills, a short distance from the main Haverfordwest- Cardigan road. The diameter of the circle varies from 72 to 75 ft, and the number of the stones is 16, of which three are prostrate. The stones are ice borne boulders, of which a great number are scattered over the common. Two have apparently been split, but probably by the force of nature and not by man.

From the manner in which the prostrate stones have been covered by the growth of peat, it would appear that the standing stones must have been originally at least 1 ½ ft further out of the ground than they show at present

Towards the north east are two outlying standing stones. The largest, the western one 150yds from the centre of the circle. Has an azimuth 15E; the second, a little further east and 45ft distant azimuth 19E. The azimuth of the alignment is 59degrees 30 minutes. The western stone is 6ft 2in high 3ft long in the direction of the alignment and 2ft thick. It is a well shaped stone though undressed. The eastern stone is 6ft 2in out of the ground but the soil around it has been excavated 1ft probably on an attempt to remove the stone. It is 3ft wide in the direction of the alignment 18in deep on the eastern side tapering to a 6in point on the western side. These two stones are called an alignment, but it is very doubtful what they have been. They might have been part of a destroyed avenue, but the avenue delineated by Mr Bushell as running from the centre to these stones does not exist though there are so many stones lying about that short alignments and pointers can be seen in all directions.

The meini hirion are too far north to have reference to the sun, and nothing can be deduced from the orientation of the circle. – visited 24th September 1914.

Gors Fawr Standing Stones, Mynachlog-ddu RCAHMW,

Two erect monoliths, one 1.8m high, the other, 13.5m to the NE, 1.6m high.

A pair of standing stones sharing similar characteristics to other standing stone pairs along the southern reaches of Mynydd Preseli. These appear to frame the distant Carn Menyn outcrop when viewed from Gors Fawr stone circle (NPRN 300422) but the alignment may be entirely coincidental.

T. Driver, RCAHMW, 23rd June 2009.

Gors Fawr Stone Circle RCAHMW

On the bleak fringes of Gors Fawr bog is this near-perfect circle of sixteen stones measuring about 22 metres in diameter. Eight of the stones are of spotted dolerite, the famous 'bluestone' sourced as being from the Carn Meini outcrops to the north. Recent geophysical survey by the SPACES project, searching for any buried structures which might lie hidden beneath the circle, revealed nothing. The conclusion is that this monument probably looks much the same today as it did to its late Neolithic or Bronze Age builders. Nearby is a pair of standing stones which appears to frame the distant Carn Menyn outcrop when viewed from the south-west. In his 1963 *Shell Guide, Vyvyan Rees was unimpressed; 'Gors Fawr, the only recognisable stone circle left in the county, is very small beer'. It is, in fact, a remarkable survivor and one of the best of its kind to be seen in Wales.

Crug-Yr-Hwch; Mountain Burial Chamber RCAHMW

The much ruined burial chamber at Mynachlog Ddu has a hedge passing through it. The capstone is fallen, and other stones are described as half buried, or semi-recumbent. There are traces of a circular mound, up to 0.7m high, to the west. J.Wiles 26.02.02

2. 'A larger and impressive comlech, the capstone has slipped off the legs into a modern ditch...' (PAS, Pemb 11SE no. 7). A local writer in 1885 (quoted by Lewis 1969, 137) refers to this burial chamber as 'Llech y Gwyddon'.

Although mentioned by both Grimes (1936a, no 30) and Daniel (1950, PEM 6), the first published plan of the monument is that by Frances Lynch (1972, fig. 9, 81-2). 'The site... is so ruined that nothing can be said about it beyond remarking on the size of the fallen supporters. One of these is over 3m long and three others are more than 2m... such a size would be appropriate to a Portal Dolmen, but it is impossible to attempt any kind of reconstruction'. The remnants of the round mound, c.0.6m high and 7m wide, are best seen on the east side of the hedge bank.

Carn Menyn Cairn RCAHMW

A much ruined cairn set below the westerly crags of Carn Menyn. The cairn is a roughly circular heap of stones, about 15m in diameter and 1.5m high. It is much ruined and a 3.0m by 2.5m capstone is exposed at the centre along with the stones of a collapsed chamber. This appears to be a Neolithic or Bronze Age funerary monument, although a later date cannot be ruled out. It was re-planned by T. Driver in 1993 for an undergraduate dissertation with Southampton University and the plan is in NMRW archive. An extract from C. T. Barker from 1992 states 'Also known as Coetan Arthur... this disturbed cairn is c.15m in diameter and c.1.5m high... its centre dominated by a large ?capstone 2.8m long, 2.5m maximum width, and 0.6m thick. Carn Menyn 'BLUESTONE' Outcrops Of Spotted Dolerite; Carn Meini RCAHMW

. Carn Menyn (singular, for the central, main outcrop) or Carn Meini (plural, describing all the outcrops). A series of natural outcrops of spotted dolerite ('bluestone') which naturally fragments into pillars, blocks and screes. Noted as a geological source of the stonehenge 'bluestones' but debate is still active as to whether the stones reached Salisbury Plain in Wiltshire through glacial or human agency. There is however evidence for quarrying on this outcrop Louise Barker, RCAHMW, 15th May 2006

The Carn Meini outcrops on Mynydd Preseli have become famous in Archaeological literature as the geological source for the 'bluestones' used at Stonehenge in Wiltshire. The 1.5- to 1.8-metre (5- to 6-feet) tall, narrow pillars formed a circle between the more massive Sarsen 'trilithons', or arches, which made up the main outer circle and the innermost stone settings. In 1923 petrological examination confirmed the scattered outcrops of Carn Meini on the south-west of Mynydd Preseli as being the source of the distinctive blue-grey spotted dolerite with large white spots used in some of the earliest phases of the Stonehenge circles on Salisbury Plain. Indeed, a number of prehistoric monuments, including a ruinous cairn at Carn Menyn and Gors Fawr stone circle to the south, are also composed of this unusual rock. Early investigators concluded that the known superiority of this same spotted dolerite as a raw material for Neolithic stone axes could have sparked off the massive human effort necessary to move the stones. The suggested route would have seen the blocks sledged overland to the upper reaches of the Eastern Cleddau, thence by sea along the Bristol Channel to the River Avon, and finally upstream to Stonehenge itself.

Some geologists and archaeologists have challenged this traditional view, proposing instead that glaciation, not human effort, carried the bluestones to Salisbury Plain. They cite finds of spotted dolerite in glacial erratics on Flat Holm and Steep Holm in the Bristol Channel as evidence for this geological movement. In 2002 an ambitious new programme of survey was commenced for the prehistoric landscapes of Strumble and Preseli by Geoffrey Wainwright and Timothy Darvill. The Strumble-Preseli Ancient Communities and Environment Study (SPACES) increased the known number of prehistoric monuments on the ridge between Carn Siân and Foel Trigarn by 300 percent, and its new surveys of famous individual sites, like Gors Fawr, have helped to forge new understandings about prehistoric life in these hills and valleys . The SPACES project found an intense concentration of activity at Carn Menyn, including prehistoric burial monuments and axe-flaking sites. Worked bluestone pillars have been found broken and abandoned in transit down from the outcrops. Although these are of Stonehenge dimensions, they remain difficult to date, especially as the outcrops provided durable, conveniently-sized blocks in modern times for lintels and hearthstones and were quarried for building stone for at least two nearby Chapels. T. Driver, RCAHMW, 7th Dec 2010.

There are a series of natural outcrops of spotted dolerite ('bluestone') which naturally fragments into pillars, blocks and screes. Noted as the geological source of the Stonehenge 'bluestones' but debate is still active as to whether the stones reached Salisbury Plain in Wiltshire through glacial or human agency.

Survey work by Wainwright and Darvill in 2003 and 2004 for the Strumble-Preseli Ancient Communities and Environments project (SPACES) has identified possible sites of quarrying, or hollows from which loose blocks have been extracted, undated evidence for Mining in the form of deep cuttings resembling adits (in the eastern part of the Carn) and a possible axe flaking floor at the south-east foot of the Carn where there are intrusive outcrops of a rhyolite beneath the dolerite outcrops. Most interesting has been the identification of three or four large orthostats which appear to have been abandoned on the southern slopes below the Carns during transportation. All show signs of quarrying along one side, with the other sides retaining the natural, weathered stone surface. Some are propped up on other stones; one is split in two. It would appear from this evidence that blocks of spotted dolerite were being worked free from the outcrops at some point in the past, and dragged south from the outcrops towards the lowlands. Narberth, Narberth, Yn Arberth.

Originally a defended Castle town, this is now a thriving service centre for a large area of eastern Pembrokeshire.

The Castle dating from 1246 is in ruins and is not open to the public. There are some fine buildings in the town including the Town Hall and Magistrates Court.

The Church tower dates from the 1200s, but the rest was rebuilt in 1879. There are a some craft workshops in the town.

The town could be of either Welsh or English foundation.

Parish of Narberth ---RCAM

The present parishes of Narberth North and Narberth South are recent administrative sub divisions of the earlier civil and ecclesiastical parish of Narberth which may have also comprised the modern parishes of Robeston (Robertston) Moleston and Mounton.

Though not named as a separate district in the early lists of Welsh Chieftdoms it is fairly certain that Narberth had early attained to a place of dignity and importance in the group of small principalities which constituted the province of Demetia or Dyfed

The original form of the name was Arberth. The tribal holdings and villages were Yn Arberth, 'in Arberth' and this style on the lips of a strange race such as the Norsemen from Scandinavia and the later Northmen from Normandy, naturally became Narberth.

Note — The earliest drawing of the Castle seems to be that of the brothers Buck in 1740. So far as this exhibits its condition at that date, there were then standing bastions and curtain walls in which were set arched doors, windows and a gable end with chimney – the building was inhabited as a dwelling house as late as 1657 (Fenton, Tours p309) – and a well preserved gateway.

The original mound Castle of Narberth is unquestionably the earthen Motte known as Sentence Castle. The position appears to have been found too open to attack and was deserted for the stone Castle, probably after the destructive inroad of Prince Llewelyn ap Gruffydd in 1256, when several of the castles of Dyfed 'including Arberth' were demolished. Sentence Castle is doubtless the Castle which is stated by Fenton to have been constructed by Sir Andrew Perrott.

The visible remains of the single ward Narberth Castle are thought to date from the mid-thirteenth century and later. They include a rectangular enclosure approximately 40m north to south by 20m with the ruins of two quarter-engaged drum towers and traces of a curtain wall with two semi-circular bastions to the west of the enclosure. To the east is a vaulted cellar, the remains of a tower, and evidence of two garderobes.

The Castle is first mentioned in 1116 and was possibly occupied until the seventeenth century. It is described in a survey of 1539.

Edwards, Emily Hewlett Castles and strongholds of Pembrokeshire Tenby 1909

This time-worn ruin crowns a slight rise on the skirts of the little town of Narberth anciently Arberth, meaning "above the wood"; we know, however, from an engraving by the brothers Buck, that in 1740 an imposing structure remained. Bastions and walls, arched doors and windows, a gable-end with chimneys and a complete gateway some distance from the central group, were then standing. At a remote date there were undoubtedly several strongholds in this vicinity, of which Mabinogion legend tells, but the existing ruin is all that remains of a Castle built on this site about 1246 by Sir Andrew Perrot, a knight of Norman extraction, who married the daughter of Ralph Mortimer, Earl of March. The fortress, continuing in the family of the "gentle Mortimer," favourite of Queen Isabella, passed to Richard, Duke of York, whence it fell into the hands of the Crown. King Henry VIII. gave it to Sir Rhys ap Thomas "in recompense for his good services in the wars, as well in England and Wales as beyond seas done." Sir Rhys evidently put the Castle in good repair, for Leland, writing shortly after his death, calls it a "praty pile of old Sir Rhees's." On the attainder of Rhys Griffith, grandson to the above, the estate reverted to the Crown.

In 1677 the Castle was occupied by Captain Richard Cassel, a Parliamentary, and former Governor of Tenby; he founded Narberth Market, on which account he carried on a protracted law-suit with the Tenby Corporation.

In 1681 John Barlow, of Slebech, purchased Narberth, which then became part of the Slebech estate.

1914 RCAM Narberth Castle

The ruins of what was originally a small but imposing medieval Castle stands upon a knoll at the south end of the town, about 200yds from the parish Church. The existing remains show a pile, rectangular in plan, with three quarter engaged drum towers at the Angles. The residential portion of the Castle was placed on the side of the irregular quadrangle furthest from the entrance where a fragment of walling still shows a window and pointed door. The stair newels remain in several of the towers. The south tower has its exterior wall fairly perfect up to the third storey, and shows a few traces of round headed lights, but most of the buildings have been swept away altogether; those that remain are in such a ruinous condition that no detailed description of the place is possible.

Narberth Castle Tony Roberts 1989.

Castle here was burnt by the Welsh in 1116, but the surviving remains today are probably from a successor Castle built by the Normans some time before 1250. The present remains were probably preceded by what is now called Sentence Castle, a few miles south near Templeton. There was also an attack on the Castle in 1257. Narberth Castle was a rough rectangular enclosure with four corner towers. The entire north side and the gatehouse have vanished. A great Hall lay between the two southern towers and was at right-Angles to a great chamber over a fine vaulted store-room, which still remains.

Readers of the Mabinogion; the famous collection of Welsh folk tales, will recall that Pwyll, prince of Dyfed, held his splendid court at Arberth, the Welsh name for Narberth, and from there he and his court went hunting in the valley of Cych, where many adventures took place.

The Castle had very little later history.

In 1516 it was given by Henry VII to Sir Rhys ap Thomas, but when his grandson was executed in 1531, it reverted to the Crown and was allowed to decay.

The Castle is on private ground but can be viewed from the road.

Castle Owners

In 1102 Arnulf de Montgomery lost all the territories he had laid claim to and it can be presumed that Narberth were included in the estates seized by Henry 1st. According to the charter of Pembroke granted by Henry I the burgesses had the right to cut timber for house building from his forest of Narberth. Later Cwniwd Arberth was granted to Henry Fitzroy a bastard son of Henry I via his mistress Princess Nest, the daughter of Rhys ap Tewder and wife of Gerald de Windsor. Henry Fitzroy styled himself 'Lord of Arberth' He was killed in 1157 fighting in Anglesey. Later in 1176- 98 there was grant made by William Herizon of lands at Amroth to the Knights of St John at Slebech lands that William Herizon held by fee from William of Narberth. Was this a descendent of Henry Fitzroy?

Upon or soon after the death of William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke in 1231, and the division of his immense patrimony between the heiresses, The Castle of Narberth was taken into the hands of the Crown and, with a considerable area of land surrounding it, it became the crown lordship and Castle of Narberth. It was granted to Sir Rhys ap Thomas by Henry VIII but on the attainder and execution of Sir Rhys ap Thomas 's grandson and heir it again fell to the Crown. In 1609 there was notice of the intention of Mr Barloe -[Slebech] to purchase the property which was estimated by Mr Edward Carne, Crown Receiver of South Wales as being eight miles in length and 6 miles in breadth and included, Villa Nerberth, Templeton, Moleston, Caneston, Newton, Robeston, Welfrey and Talghe.

George Barlow seems to have obtained the grant of the lordship but troubles broke out between him and the tenants and a suit was commenced at the Court of Exchequer regarding the conditions of tenancy in the Lordship.

Henry IV had granted Narberth Castle for life to Sir Thomas Carew who lived there and maintained 10 men at arms there plus 20 bowmen. The wages 12d per day for each man-at-arms and 6d per day per bowman.

Narberth forest was south of Narberth. Once hunting ground of the Knights of St John of Slebech. In the reign of James I it was still stocked with red deer and provided large quantities of oak for the Navy. Introducing west Wales. - Maxwell Frazer 1956

Narberth Town history

The town of Narberth is built on rising ground just to the north of a small tributary of the Eastern Cleddau.

There is no direct evidence on the origins of settlement. Following the conquest of Pembrokeshire by the Normans under Arnulf de Montgomery, Narberth is said to have been granted to Stephen Perrott. It is unlikely, however, that he constructed any fortifications here, and the Castle near Arberth was probably Sentence Castle at Templeton. Although midway between Narberth and Templeton stands the remains of another stronghold on Camp Hill which has been attributed to Perrott. It may well be that there was no Castle at Narberth at that period but only at Camp Hill or Sentence Castle.

Certainly the visible masonry remains of Narberth Castle are no earlier than the late 13th or early 14th century.

Very little is known of Narberth during the medieval period beyond references to the Castle. The borough seems to have come into being along with the Castle, and by 1282 it had its own mill, and there was a yearly Fair on the feast of St Andrews.

The Church, dedicated to the same saint, also dates from the 13th Century - it appears in the Taxatio of 1291 and it gave its name to Church Street, one of the principal areas of the early town. In 1532 there were only 30 burgages here and John Leland, four years later, noted it only as a poore village. The principal development, in fact, was post-medieval, associated with the granting of a Thursday Market in 1652, which was fostered by a certain Richard Castle. The Market expanded rapidly, mainly at the expense of that at Tenby, and as a result the Tenby burgesses applied to the King in 1671 for its suppression. This was granted in 1676, but by 1688 the Market had been re-established. The town continued to grow steadily with the development of some local industry, principally the manufacture of hats and limestone quarrying.

This developing 17th-century town centred on the Market Square which lies immediately north of the Castle gates. The population at this time has been estimated at about seven hundred, but in view of the small number of burgages recorded a century earlier before the granting of the Market it seems unlikely that there was much settlement along the High Street and St James Street during the medieval period. Indeed, the early town may not have been little more than a cluster of dwellings along Church Street, Castle Street, and Picton Place, with what was later to be the Market Square representing the northern limits of development.

1830 Narberth

Is a small Market-town, in the parish and hundred of its name, and county of Pembroke; 238 miles from London, 22 from Carmarthen, and 13 from Pembroke; situated on a branch of the Milford river, and is an ancient place, once noted for its Castle, now decayed, and a modern seat erected on its site.

Coal Mining

There are productive mines of stone-coal and culm in the neighbourhood, but they are not worked to the extent which their importance would seem to demand.

Upon the river, which is navigable to Blackpool, about three miles distant, is a very excellently constructed corn mill, recently erected. The town is governed by one of the high constables of the hundred, who is appointed annually, and must be a resident; assisted, by constables elected at the manorial court leet, of which the representatives of the late Nathaniel Phillips esquire, are lords. The places of worship are, one Church, and three Chapels for dissenters; the living of Narberth is a rectory, in the gift of the crown; the present incumbent is the Rev. Wm. Lloyd.

The Market is held on Thursday, and there are eight annual fairs for cattle. The parish contained, by the last returns, 2,295 inhabitants

1843 Narberth A Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

Narberth, a newly-created borough, a Market-town, the head of a union, and a parish comprising the North and South divisions, in the hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 10 miles (E.) from Haverfordwest, 11 (N.) from Tenby, 14½ (N. E.) from Pembroke, and 254 (W.) from London; the parish containing 2620 inhabitants, of whom 1825 are in the North, and 795 in the South, division. This place, in ancient records "Arberth," and still called so by the Welsh, appears early to have been distinguished as the residence of some of the chieftains of the country; and mention occurs, in the more ancient periods of its history, of Pwyll Pendevig, of the royal house of Dyved, setting out from his palace of Narberth to Hunt in the Valle of Cych. On the conquest of Pembrokeshire by Arnulph de Montgomery, in the reign of William Rufus, the place became the head of a considerable lordship, which was allotted by Arnulph to Stephen Perrot, who had accompanied him in his expedition into this part of the principality, and who, for the security of his territories, is said to have erected a fortress on the summit of a Hill (still designated Camp Hill) between the village of Templeton, in the parish, and the present town. This spot was well adapted to the purposes of observation and defence, and was at that time covered with a thick forest: the remains of military works, which, according to the Welsh chronicles, were destroyed by Gruydd ab Rhys, may yet be traced.

Sir Andrew Perrot, grandson of the first knight, subsequently erected the Castle, of which the remains form so prominent and picturesque a feature in the foreground of the town. For this purpose he selected a very eligible site, commanding the pass of the valley along which the high road through the county passes; and having completed the building, he garrisoned it with a party of Flemings, whom Henry I. had settled in this part of Wales, and for whom and his dependents, under the immediate protection of the Castle, Sir Andrew built habitations, which formed the origin of the present town. Little is recorded of the history of the Castle. In 1256 it was taken, and the fortifications destroyed, by Llewelyn ab Gruffydd, Prince of North Wales; but it seems to have recovered from the injury received upon that occasion. The lordship and Castle were generally the property of the crown, or of some distinguished member of the English peerage, till the reign of Henry VIII., who gave them to Sir Rhys ab Thomas, at which time the fortress was in a good state of repair, according to the testimony of Leland, who describes it as "a praty pile of old Sir Rees." The Castle suffered material injury during the usurpation of Cromwell; but it appears, notwithstanding, to have remained in a habitable state till the year 1657, when it formed part of the immense possessions of the Barlows, of Slebech, who, in the 4th of James II., obtained permission to hold here a Market and Fair, and to receive the tolls and customs arising from them.

The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence above a narrow valley, two miles and a half eastward of the Eastern Cleddy river, and in the Northern division of the parish. It consists principally of three narrow Streets diverging obliquely from the Market-place, in the centre, and is partially paved: the houses are irregularly built, and of mean appearance. Narberth fails in realizing the expectations which the distant view of it excites. As seen from the adjacent heights, with its Church, and the remains of its ancient Castle mantled with ivy, it forms a prominent and highly interesting object; but on a nearer approach, its want of regularity in the order, and of beauty in the form, of its buildings, destroys the effect of its distant appearance. The surrounding scenery is richly varied and beautifully picturesque. The southern part of the parish produces abundance of excellent limestone, of which great quantities are burnt for the supply of the neighbourhood, and a considerable portion is quarried for building, some of which, from its being susceptible of a fine polish, is manufactured into mantel-pieces of great beauty. The town has lost much of its importance, and sustained a diminution of its inhabitants, owing to the diversion of the western road, which now runs four miles on the south of Narberth to Hobbs' Point near Her Majesty's dockyard. The Pembroke-Dock branch of the South Wales railway, if completed, will pass between this road and the town, and will probably tend to revive the trade. A new Market-house, considered to be one of the most commodious in South Wales, has been built at the sole expense of the Baron de Rutzen, of Slebech Hall the proprietor of the Castle and Lord of the manor, which he obtained by marriage with the heiress of the late Nathaniel Phillips, esq. The Market is on Thursday, and is abundantly supplied with provisions of every kind, at an extremely moderate price. Fairs are held on March 21st, May 13th, June 2nd and 29th, August 10th, September 23rd, October 26th, and December 11th: they are all noted cattle-fairs, and are much resorted to by graziers and drovers from England. Hats are manufactured to a limited extent; and the shoe trade is considerable. By the act of 1832, for "Amending the Representation of the People," Narberth was created a borough, contributory, with Fishguard, to that of Haverfordwest in the return of a member to parliament: the number of registered voters within the limits of the borough is forty-five. It is also a polling-place in the election of a knight for the shire. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here; and one of the county debt-courts established in 1847 is fixed in the town, with powers extending over the registration-district of Narberth. The former lock-up house here, has been superseded by a new building, erected, with a house for the superintending constable of the hundred, by the county in 1844.

The living is a rectory, with that of RobestonWathen, rated in the King's Books at £25. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes of the benefice have been commuted for a rent-charge of

£550; and there is a glebe of sixty acres, valued at £60 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Andrew, and supposed to have been originally erected by Sir Andrew Perrot, the founder of the Castle, has been lately rebuilt, partly by subscription, aided by a grant of £150 from the Incorporated Society for promoting the building and enlargement of churches and Chapels; and partly by a rate upon the inhabitants, amounting to one-third of the whole expense. It is a very neat edifice, in the later style of English architecture, and, in consideration of the gift from the society, contains 150 free sittings, in addition to fifty which were previously unappropriated. Prior to 1829 both the Church and parsonage-house were in a very dilapidated condition. A new rectory house and commodious out-buildings have been erected, at a cost of £913, raised by a mortgage on the living, under Gilbert's Act. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Calvinistic Methodists. A free school for poor children was founded in 1832, by George Devonald, esq., of Sodston House, who endowed it by deed enrolled in chancery, with a rent-charge of £30, issuing out of the farm of Rush Acre, consisting of eighty acres; directing that the children to be admitted should not be less than six, nor remain after attaining twelve, years of age; and vesting the future selection of the master and mistress in the incumbent and churchwardens, with the proprietor of Sodston House, for the time being. An annual subscription amounting to £40 is raised in aid of the endowment, and there are 110 boys regularly taught in a lower room on the National system, with 70 girls in an upper room. Of five Sunday schools, one is in connexion with the Church, two with the Independents, and one each with the Baptists and Wesleyans. The poor-law union of which this town is the head, was formed January 6th, 1837, and comprises within its limits the following forty-eight parishes and townships; namely, Amroath, Begelly, Bletherston, Clarbeston, Coedcanlais, Crinow, Cronwere, St. Issel's, Jeffreston, Lampeter-Velvrey, Lawhaden, LlandewiVelvrey, Llandilo, part of Llandissilio, Llangolman, part of Llanvalteg, Llanycefn, Llŷs-y-Vrân, Loveston, Ludchurch, Martletwy, St. Mary's or Maenclochog, Mounton, Mynachlogdû, Mynwere, North and South Narberth, Newtown, New Mote, Reynoldston, Robeston-Wathen, Slebech, East Williamston, and Yerbeston, in the county of Pembroke; CastelDauyran, Egremont, Eglwys-Cummin, Eglwys-Vairy-Chyrig, Hênllan-Amgoed, Kifig, Llanboidy, part of Llandissilio, Llanglydwen, part of Llanvalteg, Marros, and Pendine, in the county of Carmarthen; and Killymaenllwyd and Llangan; in the counties of Pembroke and Carmarthen. It is under the superintendence of fifty guardians, and contains a population of 21,753. The union workhouse, capable of accommodating 150 paupers, stands on an elevated spot, midway between Narberth and Templeton, in the South division of the parish, and commands a most extensive view of the country from north-east to south-west. It cost £3700, including £240 paid to Lord Milford for three acres of land: of this amount £2200 were borrowed from the Exchequer Loan Commissioners, and £1000 from the Economic Life-Assurance Society; and five per cent. of the principal is to be paid annually, until the whole be redeemed. The remains of the ancient Castle, which appears to have been a structure of considerable size, consist principally of the grand gateway between two circular towers, partly clothed with ivy, and some small portions of the walls: though not remarkable for their extent, they possess a very pleasing and interesting character, and from their situation have a highly picturesque appearance. On the eastern verge of a wood, and within the limits of the parish, are vestiges of a fine old British intrenchment, nearly triangular in form, and comprising an area of about two acres and a half, with the Longest side towards the river Cleddy; it is defended on all sides, except on the east, where is a natural ravine, by a lofty rampart of great breadth, and has only one entrance, at the south-eastern angle. About a mile to the south of the town is the ancient village of Templeton, so called from its having been the resort of the Knights Templars of Slebech, who were accustomed to pursue the diversion of hunting at this place. The cottages in the village have an appearance of great age; and the remains of numerous ruined buildings, together with the tradition that there was once a Church or Chapel of ease here, on the site of which is a building, subsequently used by a congregation of Unitarian dissenters, but now in ruins, afford evidence of its having been a place of more importance than it is at present. A large cattle-Fair is held in the village on the 12th of November. Grove, in the parish, is chiefly remarkable as having been the patrimonial inheritance of Colonel

Poyer, who so gallantly assisted in defending Pembroke Castle during the parliamentary war, and who, together with Colonels Laugharne and Powell, was tried by Cromwell for high treason, and sentenced to suffer death. Cromwell being prevailed upon to spare the lives of two, three papers were folded up, on two of which was written "Life given by God," and the third, which was blank, having fallen by lot to Colonel Poyer, he was shot in Covent Garden, on the 25th of April, 1649. From this circumstance the family motto, "Sors est contra me," was taken. A field on the estate commands a most extensive prospect over the counties of Cardigan, Carmarthen, Glamorgan, and Pembroke, in Wales, and over those of Cornwall, Devon, and Somerset, in England.

1895 Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire

Thence ensues the Long, steady ascent of Cock's Hill, which lands us eventually at a considerable altitude on the outskirts of Narberth ; a place that, with the exception of its ruined Castle, has little to commend it to wayfarers who, like ourselves, are ' in search of the picturesque.'

A town of some importance in bygone times, when its Markets were resorted to by half the countryside, Narberth appears of late to have fallen upon degenerate days: the mail-coaches having deserted its grass-grown Streets for ever, while the railway trains that have usurped their place give the unfortunate town the go-by, in favour of other and more enterprising communities.

Wending our way down the long, featureless High Street, we pass on our left the broad front of the de Rutzen Arms, a large wayside posting- house, around whose weed -grown courtyard hang memories of the old coaching days. Then, leaving the parish Church away to the right, and navigating some intricate lanes, we approach the outskirts of the town, and make the best of our way to the Castle ruins.

Crowning the southward slope of the Hill upon which the town is located, Narberth Castle occupies a position of considerable importance. The ruins of the fortress, though small, and devoid of striking features, are not without a certain picturesque appearance when seen from the Tenby road. It must, however, be confessed that ' distance lends enchantment to the view ;' for the existing remains are of a very fragmentary nature, consisting of a few broken bastions, with some odds and ends of more or less dilapidated masonry.

At the time of the Norman Conquest, Narberth fell to the share of Sir Stephen Perrot, a follower of the redoubtable Arnulph de Montgomery. Although there is record of a Castle here as Long ago as the eleventh century, the present structure is certainly not of earlier date than the days of Sir Andrew Perrot, or, say, about the middle of the thirteenth century; indeed, the character of the existing work seems to point to its erection at an even later period.

In the reign of Edward III., Narberth Castle came into the possession of Roger Mortimer, the great Earl Marcher, and sometime favourite of queen Isabella ; passing subsequently under the direct control of the Crown. Eventually bluff King Hal presented the estate in his own freehanded way to our old acquaintance. Sir Rhys ap Thomas ; and so when John Leland, the famous antiquary, travelled into South Wales upon his 'Laborious Journey, and Search for England's Antiquities,' he duly described Narberth Castle as a ' praty ile of old Sir Rees.'

To the south of the town lies a broken, hilly district called Narberth Forest ; whence were procured, in bygone days, large quantities of oak and other timber, for bulding the famous ' wooden walls ' of the British navy. In olden times, this locality formed a favourite hunting-ground of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, whose custom it was to ride out from their headquarters at Slebech, and chase the wild deer that frequented its woodland glades.

The village of Templeton, (which doubtless derives its name from that martial fraternity), is now a mere rambling, skeleton of a place, with a few dwelling-houses of the better sort amongst the cottages that flank the highway. Once upon a time, it is said, Templeton could boast its village-cross and ancient wayside Chapel ; but of these not a solitary vestige has survived to give colour to the story.

The Parish Church

—NB The dedication of the Church to St Andrew's is said by Fenton to perpetuate the name of Sir Andrew Perrot its builder. The 1609 survey of the lordship states that a yearly Fair was held upon the feast of St Andrew the Apostle. St Andrews Church

Church, rebuilt 1879 except for (?)14th C. tower: first mentioned 1291 it is thought that the Church may have been removed to its present location from an earlier site immediately N of the Castle where burials have been found, in the 13th C. It now contains nothing of Archaeological interest. The tower 17ft square is of three stages, with corbel table and restored battlements. An Angle turret carries the tower stairs. The lower storey is plain vaulted. It dates from the early half of the 13th century

The old Rectory RCAM

– The Rev John Morris M.A. rector of Narberth writing to the Commissioners in 1914 stated The old Rectory was built in 1827, in the centre of 56 acres of ancient glebe, and 1 ¼ miles from the Church. In the field adjoining the house a very old parishioner informed me thirty years ago that his parents informed him that there was an ancient building in which they remember weddings taking place. No vestige now, but when the rectory was built in 1827, three stone arched doorways were removed from the ruin in said field and used in the building of the Rectory as doorways for the drawing room, dining room and study. The Rectory was much enlarged in 1873, and these stone arches were then removed and placed in the two doorways of the garden and doorway of the back yard. Near where the ruins were standing there was and is now a beehive shaped well of splendid water. The Old Rectory was sold in 1902.

The Chapel of Mounton, which is situated on the confines of Narberth Parish, is in a parish of its own, but nothing is known as to its early history. In 1721 it was in ruins, and according to Lewis Topographical Dictionary, published in 1840, it was then consolidated with Narberth, to which rectory it was considered to be a Chapel of ease. The tithes of Mounton Parish, amounting to £21 0s. 4d. are owned by Mr. Wilfred Lewis of Henllan. The Chapel was rebuilt by the Right Rev. Richard Lewis, late Bishop of Llandaff.

Narberth Education

1673 Evans John Narberth licensed to keep a school "Pembrokeshire in By,gone Days

1847 Commission on Education in Wales (The Blue Book)

Besides the town of Narberth, this parish includes a considerable hamlet called Templeton, about two miles to the south of the town, on the road to Tenby. There is no gratuitous education for the poor except such as is afforded by the Devonald Charity; nor is this charity in any degree supplemented by local subscription. Two schoolrooms have been raised in the parish, principally by the dissenters, with aid from Government , one at Templeton and another called the New Schoolroom in Sheep Street. The latter was closed at the time of my visit. The master was not expected back for two months. There is no committee for the management of this school, except the trustees. Considerable dissatisfaction was expressed to me at the school's being closed. The room was substantially built, but small and not well furnished.

At Templeton, a school committee had been formed, and subscriptions promised for a period of five years in aid of education. If with the aid of school pence £25 per annum could be raised it would exceed the expectations of some of the promoters with whom I spoke. The payment at the time of my visit was 2 ½ d per week. The object was to make the school in many instances gratuitous. Templeton adjoins that part of Begelly and St Issell's parishes in which Carn, and Molleston and Caterhook gate are situated; and it would be most desirable to establish a gratuitous or very cheap school of an efficient character, in that locality. The feeling in favour of and confidence in, the voluntary principle was by no means universal.

The Rev T R Williams, the Independent minister at Templeton keeps a school in his house for farmers' sons and had nine pupils at the time of my visit. He used formerly to keep the day school at Templeton. He considered that most of the people could Read but not write. He had married three couples a day of two before my visit, and only one man of the whole number could write. The second schoolroom at Templeton would accommodate 80 scholars ie nearly as many as (besides those already in school) were of an age to be under instruction in the neighbourhood. The only question was money.

The parish of Narberth is divided into North and south, and the town is a point at which the Welsh and English languages and (to some extent) dress and manners meet without intermixing. Almost in the same street (so sharply is the line drawn) one side will speak only Welsh and the other only English. The northern is the Welsh part.

The Devonald Charity Schools – The present schoolhouse was originally a poorhouse. When the union workhouse was built, the Rector took possession of the building vacant and converted it into a schoolhouse. The site was originally waste, and the parish poorhouse was built upon it without title. It is not very clear in whom the legal property is now vested. I was informed that the Lord of the manor had spoken of his having a claim.

Previously to 1832 there was no endowment for the education of the poor of Narberth. The rector at that time maintained an industrial school for girls twice a week and a Sunday school. In 1832 the Devonald trust was created. With this fund a cottage was rented for schoolroom in 1834 and in 1837 the school was removed to the old poorhouse, which was repaired and put in its present state by the Rector at a cost of £40.

The first class on the day of my visit contained 27. The classbook used among them was called 'The Faith and Duty of a Christian'. They were in the habit of writing chapters of this out as dictation lessons and then learning them. But they had no connected reading book in use at the time of my visit, neither Bible nor any other. I heard the master examining them on the tenth chapter of this compilation. They answered well and Readily, giving not merely the words of the texts, but also the chapters and verses. The latter were in each case first demanded as if in examining upon Euclid, the examiner had stated the problem or theorem and then asked for the number of the proposition proving it. Chapter and verse were generally given.

I heard them repeating the tables in a class slowly and distinctly; but many were not really repeating.

I experienced great difficulty in knowing how to hear the first class Read as they had nothing but this

'Faith and Duty of a Christian' book with which most of them were probably more or less familiar, and sufficient number of Bibles and Testaments were not to be had. I accordingly took the four monitors and heard them Read from the fourth chapter of St Mark. They all Read fairly, three well. The copy books in this class were very dirty, but this was excused because they had been filled with dictation lessons and then taken home to be learned from.

The second class could in general answer very few questions

There was no blackboard in use. This school would be a good one if properly furnished with books and if part of the time now given to learning the words and references of a number of fragmentary text were expanded on a more extended course of secular instruction.

An attempt has been made since 1844 to make them pay 1d per week, but this has very generally failed. The common people of the place are wretchedly poor and cannot spare money, or even their children for school. They profess great anxiety about education, but this feeling does not influence their conduct – they utterly disregard all school regulations. A great number of them are shoemakers. The Rector told me there was not one in the place who could buy £20 worth of leather – they are at the mercy of the curriers, to whom they run in debt and live from hand to mouth. Hat making used to give considerable employment here as in Carmarthen this has been destroyed by the introduction of (what are called) Jim Crow hats. Coal and culm are to be had close at hand from Begelly and the neighbourhood. A ton of the latter at the pit's mouth is worth 4s 6d. The farmers in the northern quarter of the parish have larger holdings than those in the southern quarter (where there are not more than three who pay £100 a year rent) but all are poor, being heavily rented. The small farmers are much on a par with labourers.

East Gate Schoolhouse

I visited this school on the 8th of December. It is held in an airy and convenient room on the north extremity of the town. It is kept by the Rev H Davies, an Independent. There is considerable mystery respecting the ownership of the site and building. The Rev William Lloyd, Rector of Narberth showed me an indenture of bargain and sale (being the usual lease for a year) wherein on Ann Pritchard grants this site to certain trustees, upon trusts to be declared in the deed of release. The latter deed was not in Mr Lloyd's possession; and Mr Davies said that none such existed; at any rate I could obtain no account of it on the spot. The indenture of bargain and sale bears the date 1812.

A schoolroom was built upon the site by subscription, at a cost (I was told) of “400. The subscription list was headed with a statement that the building was to be raised 'for the purpose of educating the poor'. Among the other subscribers – Allen esq. of Cresselly gave £10 and Lord Milford £20.

The first occupant was one Lewis, a man of considerable abilities who, however, at once kept a pay school, with the concurrence or connivance of the trustees.

There was an incumbrance upon the property, which the Rev Thomas a former Rector of Begelly, Rural Dean, paid off and acquired off and so acquired a lien upon it. The Rev Evans a former curate of the place contrived by means of a subscription under plea of restoring the school to its original use, to pay off Mr Thomas, and by him the building was devoted to the use of one of Mrs Bevan's circulating schools, which was complained of by the subscribers as a breach of faith, because some of them at least considered that they were subscribing to establish an unsectarian school. The present Rector found the building occupied by Mrs Bevan's school. One morning, however, without any notice, the door was locked and the schoolmaster excluded on the plea that the trust was not for establishing a charity school but for promoting a private school, to which the children of tradesmen and farmers might be sent.

The key was delivered to a Mr Davies who kept a pay school there for some time and was succeeded by Mr Sallen. The last trustee under Mrs Pritchard's grant was Mr Stephen George of Narberth. To him and to Mr Allen the Rev H Davies, Independent minister, who now occupies the building, paid £20 and expended as much more on repairs. No new trustees have been appointed. Mr Davies seems to consider himself as owner of the building and site, at least to the extent of his outlay.

The terms of this school are £25 per annum for boarders and 10s 6d per quarter for day scholars. It is an ordinary grammar school – Two boys neither of them had learned latin and greek Long but constructed as if they were taught on a tolerably sound system. The elementary parts of mathematics were taught at this school – A good deal of attention appeared to be paid to English composition, orthography and grammar. They were mainly prepared for the ministry for which some were ordained directly from the school. This is no otherwise a school for the poor than so far as it may possible be trust property and so far as Mr Davies educated from time to time one or two boys whose parents he knows gratuitously.

Union Work house school.

This school is held in a spacious airy and well lighted room, with a boarded floor, upstairs in the Union Workhouse. I found both room and its furniture in good repair and very clean. There was a comfortable fire burning in it, and a screen round the children on the side of the door. 15 children were present; I found the mistress sitting at the head of a Long table, which ran from the fireplace across the room; she was sewing. On her right sat three girls, also sewing; on her left five boys together, and one boy lower down by himself; six little children sat on a form apart, but within the screen and not far from the fire. Two of the girls and the five boys at the upper end of the table were reading the first chapter of Hebrews when I entered verse by verse. The two girls laid down their sewing when their turn came, had the place pointed out to them, Read the verse and then resumed their sewing. All the clothes used in the house are made in the school room. I stood for some time, but beyond occasional corrections I heard nothing said by the mistress. I then set them to Read the 12th chapter of St Luke. One could not find the place; two only could Read moderately well. There is no house chaplain. The children go to Church every Sunday weather permitting. The house is also visited by the Rev H Davies, Independent minister of Narberth, regularly once a month, and by other ministers occasionally.

No arithmetic is taught; the copies are written ill. Over the fireplace were four prints of natural history from the Christian Knowledge Society. The children had in use a little Chatachism of general information called the 'Mothers Catechism' which seemed a good sort of book. Better books were being used here than either at the Union schools of Llandovery, LLandilo or Carmarthen; and in point of the children's comfort there was no comparison. The room used for a schoolroom at Llandovery corresponds to what is here a dayroom opening from the boy's yard. In point, however of instruction, the school hardly rises above a nursery. – The little children on the separate bench had nothing to occupy them.

Mrs Arundell' School, Island House. This school is kept by a saddler's wife in an underground kitchen, which I found extremely clean, and well lighted by a large window. Mrs Arundell states that her object in keeping it was not for gain, but for her own amusement and the benefit of poor children, some of whom she teaches gratuitously. The school furniture consists of one square table, one Long table and three benches, and the kitchen contains besides many articles for domestic use. Mrs Arundell is ignorant of Welsh, nor is it the mother tongue of her pupils, who are mostly very young. They Read imperfectly, but the best scholars were said to be absent, it being Market day, when they are wanted to help their parents. They could give few answers from what they Read, but appear to have been well taught in 'Dr Watt's Catechism of Scriptural history.'

The samplers appeared to be worked very neatly and with great care. The copy books also were well written, and kept exceedingly clean

Dec 10th 1846 Wm Morris Assistant.

Mr Joseph Lewis's Day School, Sheep St ---The schoolroom is part of a dwelling house on the ground floor, and the smell arising from so many children being crammed in such a small room was quite overpowering. There was a large fire in the grate at the time. The window was a small one, and was kept closed. The floor, walls and room altogether were in bad repair. I observed, after the scholars went out at noon (for there was no seeing anything but children while they were in the room) 1 square table for the master, 2 Long tables for the writers and ciphers, 5 benches and one chair. The master is one of the most helpless creatures I have ever seen; a cold had fixed in his back when a child, and, having been neglected, had rendered him completely unable to walk. He crawled about the school like a toad, and when he goes to Church or Chapel or anywhere out of doors, he is obliged to be carried on somebody's back. He said to me 'I teaches them' and to the scholars 'I often tells you'. Notwithstanding his helpless state, he manages to keep his scholars in very good order with a rod 6ft Long in his hand, which as he sat in the middle of a room only 10ft by 12 reached to every part of it, and maintained discipline without requiring locomotion.

With the exception of a few farmers and tradesmen's children, his scholars were labourers' children, some of whom could speak and Read Welsh as well as English. Several of them Read exceedingly well, and the copy books were not bad had they been kept clean. In arithmetic the scholars could work out calculations and knew their tables well.

The master said that had only just started on English grammar.

Mrs Owen's School Sheep Street

I visited this school on 10th December 1846. It was conducted in a room, part of a dwelling house which is in tolerably good repair except the floor. The mistress is an intelligent woman and knows only English. The scholars are mostly tradesmen's labourers' and mechanics children, and generally very young. The 2nd chapter of Hebrews was Read tolerably well, and questions from that chapter were answered Readily. Arithmetic good

Miss Thomas 's School, Picton Terrace

This school is kept in a comfortable little room of a well built and neat cottage, in good repair, except the lath and plaster partition, which was demolished in some parts by the children at their leisure moments. The room is on the ground floor, and the furniture consists of one large square table, two chairs and three benches all in good repair. Some of the children were learning 'reading made Easy' and others, a little older, the Testament. They were tradesmen's and labourers' children from the town and unacquainted with the Welsh language. They Read the 8th chapter of St Matthews Gospel tolerably well and answered all the questions from the chapter correctly. They had learned basic arithmetic and only just commenced grammar. The copy books were tolerably well written

Templeton Day School.

This schoolroom was erected on the Independent burying ground about ten years ago by the subscription of the members of the congregation and a grant of £30 from the Government. It is a good schoolroom but I found it very dirty. The congregation has another schoolroom close by, nearly twice as large as this, where it is intended that after Christmas to take the boys and to teach the girls in the one where the boys and girls are now taught together. There are said to be in the immediate locality about 150 children under 15 years of age and only 45 of them are on the books of this school and 24 on the books of Mrs Gwyther, who keeps a school in the lower part of the village.

This schoolroom contained two desks, one square table and eight benches, with culm in one corner and a quantity of mortar in another. There were no maps of any description in the school.

The master is an amiable and intelligent young man, and has a good control over his pupils. He has been unable to write with his right hand by a fever which he had when nine years of age. He writes well with his left hand.

With few exceptions all his scholars are labourers' children and many of them Read with great ease, and readily answered the questions put to them from the 8th chapter of St Luke

They also learned Arithmetic.

In English Grammar they merely said that it was the art of speaking and writing the English Language correctly. The master said they were only just commencing grammar.

Mrs Gwythers Dame School

The room in which this school is kept is a part of a dwelling house and in very bad repair. There are large holes in the floor, only three panes of glass whole in the window, the others being papered; the plastered partition was broken to pieces in several parts. It contained only three small broken benches, a broken old table two chairs and an old cupboard, with divers articles for domestic use.

Mrs Gwyther does not know Welsh and most of her scholars are English. They are labourers children and appear very poor. The eighth chapter of St Matthew was Read imperfectly, and the scholars could not answer any questions from it.

The copy books were very ill written and full of blots. Nothing beyond reading and writing is professed to be taught. There were no maps nor prints of any kind in the school.

Sunday Schools

Eight Chapels are formed into a Sunday school union called the Narberth Sunday School Union.

The chief principles upon which this union is formed are the adoption of a similar method of instruction; comparison of accounts with respect to the attendance of teachers and scholars; and a system of mutual inspection. Mr David Evans of Narberth , is secretary to this union, as well as to the Pembrokeshire Educational Committee. I am indebted to him for much information concerning it. It is settled at certain periodical conferences what schools shall inspect each other. Two visitors are deputed from the visiting school for the purpose, who do not give notice of their coming, and having made their report transmit it to the secretary.

I saw some of these reports in the minute book. Making allowance for a good deal of general and commonplace reflection, they were able and honestly done, and not merely mutual laudations. Faults were pointed outeg the small proportion of children to adults; superannuated teachers set over the youngest classes etc.

Sunday schools in the Union

Tabernacle (Narberth), Carvan (Lampeter Velfrey), Bethel (Llandewi Velfry), Bethesda (Narberth) Llandissilio (Llandissilio), Nebo (Cilymaenllwyd), Ffynnonwen or Twlc (Cilymaenllwyd), Henllan (Henllan Amgoed)

Bethesda Sunday School

This school belongs to the Baptists, and is held in their Chapel. It is conducted in English, except one class of adults , which I found reading the New Testament in Welsh. There is a schoolroom under part of the Chapel but the school is always held in the Chapel in winter. It commenced this morning at 10am by the superintendent who Read 28th chapter of St Matthew; there was then a hymn and prayer. The teachers hold a meeting every Sunday to prepare the lesson for the following Sunday -at the close of school the superintendent questions the different classes on the lessons for the day. Mr Williams an Independent gave a short address to the school which was concluded with prayer.

December 6th 1846 Wm Morris Assistants

Tabernacle Sunday School – I visited this school in the afternoon; it is held by the Independents in their Chapel. There are altogether 23 classes most English but two adult classes in Welsh. At The end of school they sang and one of the teachers delivered a short prayer

1730-1830----- There seems to be some confusion in various records regarding this boy but what is evident is that the Jury and Judge took a very strong view of this case There was no recommendation to mercy or reduction in sentence to transportation as happened in many other recorded cases of the time It was a public hanging and that his body was hanged in chains after would also suggest that the case raised a lot of feeling as again this was unusual In fact he was the last juvenile to be hung in chains-----The Court records state that David Dackfield from the parish of Narberth in the county of Pembroke by trade a Cordwainer that is a high class shoe maker murdered Anne Morgans daughter of John Morgan a clothier who lived at Lampeter Velfrey on the 1st February 1801 by hitting her on the head with as stone Anne Morgans was eleven years old and David Dackfield was in the court records age 17 The murder took place at LampeterVelfrey -----David Dackfield pleaded not guilty at his trial but was found guilty and hanged at the Bowling Green Haverfordwest in Pembrokeshire on the 6th of April 1801 Afterwards his body was hanged in chains at Tavenaspit. "In 1801 a lad not more than fifteen of the name of David Duckfield was hanged for the murder of a little girl Of those who witnessed the execution I conversed with one lady who is still living who was brought by her Father as if he thought it might prove a useful deterrent lesson for a little maid under ten She was horrified with the shrieks of the boy entreating the bystanders to save him while the hangman was endeavouring to soothe him while putting the rope round his neck addressing him as "My poor boy come now! Foley Sir Thomas GCB (1757 – 9 January 1833) was a British admiral and "Hero of the Battle of the Nile". He was the second son of John Foley of Narberth, Pembrokeshire, a landowner, and the nephew of Captain Thomas Foley, who accompanied Thomas Anson on his voyage around the world. He entered the Royal Navy in 1770, and, during his time as midshipman, saw a good deal of active service in the west Indies against American privateers. Promoted lieutenant in 1778, he served under Admiral Keppel (afterwards Viscount) and Sir Charles Hardy in the Channel, and with Rodney's squadron was present at the defeat of De Langara off Cape St Vincent in 1780, and at the relief of Gibraltar. Still under Rodney's command, he went out to the West Indies, and took his part in the operations which culminated in the victory of 12 April 1782.

In the French revolutionary War he was engaged from the first. As flag-captain to Admiral John Gell, and afterwards to Sir Hyde Parker, Foley took part in the siege of Toulon in 1793, the action of Golfe Jouan in 1794, and the two fights off Toulon on the 13th of April and the 13th of July 1795. At St Vincent he was flag-captain to the second in command on Britannia. After the battle he was transferred to the Goliath (74), in which he was sent out in the following year to reinforce Nelson's fleet in the Mediterranean.

The part played by the Goliath in the Battle of the Nile was brilliant. She led the squadron round the French van, and this manoeuvre contributed not a little to the result of the day. Whether this was done by Foley's own initiative, or intended by Horatio Nelson, has been a matter of controversy (see Journal of the Royal United Service Institution, 1885, p. 916).

His next important service was with Nelson in the Baltic. At the beginning of 1801, Nelson was promoted to Vice Admiral of the Blue and after a few months, he took part as the second in command in the Battle of Copenhagen. The Elephant carried Nelson's flag and Foley acted as his chief-of-staff. During the action Nelson's commander, Sir Hyde Parker, who believed that the Danish fire was too strong, signalled for him to break off the action. Nelson ordered that the signal be acknowledged but not repeated. Legend has it that Nelson turned to his flag captain and said:

"You know, Foley, I only have one eye - I have the right to be blind sometimes" and then holding his telescope to his blind eye said "I really do not see the signal!"

Nelsons' action was approved in retrospect.

Foley was one of Nelson's "Band of Brothers". Nelson himself was a sea-officer par excellence. Yet there were many who struggled, suffered and were wounded as often as he. This could not help but develop a close relationship among the men. Nelson himself was very aware of the brotherhood which had arisen. In his biography of Nelson, David Howarth makes this clear:

"...Nelson's famous phrase, "I had the happiness to command a band of brothers'...After his first great victory, Nelson called his captains 'my darling children', and none was the least embarrassed by that. Under Jervis, the captains of the Mediterranean fleet were becoming a brotherhood, bonded by skill, experience, mutual respect and a common cause. Maybe they had not thought of it in that way before; but from about this time they all did, and Nelson most of all. And the concept - so suitable to his nature - became an important, conscious element in his conduct of the war."

An amusing illustration of the affection Nelson inspired in his captains, and of the half maternal care they exercised over the fragile and stunted body of their famous leader, is supplied by a letter from Nelson himself to Ball, written from Kioge Bay in 1801. He was racked with the Baltic cold, and wroth, as was common with him, with the still chillier winds which blew from the Admiralty Board:

"But," he says, "all in the fleet are so truly kind to me that I should be a wretch not to cheer up. Foley has put me under a regimen of milk at four in the morning; Murray has given me lozenges; Hardy is as good as ever, and all have proved their desire to keep my mind easy." That picture of one sea veteran administering warm milk to his admiral at four o'clock in the morning is amusing enough; but it shows more effectively than graver things could do the feeling Nelson inspired in his captains.

Ill-health obliged Foley to decline Nelson's offer (made when on the point of starting for the Battle of Trafalgar) of the post of Captain of the Fleet. Therefore it was Foley's fellow "brother" Thomas Hardy who was present at Nelson's death.

From 1808 to 1815, Foley commanded in the Downs and at the peace was made KCB. Sir Thomas Foley rose to be full admiral and GCB. He died while serving as commander-in-chief at Portsmouth in 1833.

He was married on 31 Jul 1802 to Lady Lucy Anne FitzGerald (1771-1851). She was the youngest surviving daughter of James FitzGerald, 1st Duke of Leinster and Lady Emily Lennox. Her mother was the great-granddaughter of Charles II, King of England, Scotland and Ireland and his mistress Louise de K  rouaille, Duchess of Portsmouth.

Lucy was the favorite sister of Lord Edward FitzGerald, one of the ill-fated leaders of the Irish Rebellion of 1798, and was herself an active participant in the rebellion. She worked as a conduit, clandestinely transmitting letters between the revolutionary Committee in Dublin and their agents in Paris. A biographer of Lord Edward wrote of Lucy that she "most closely resembled him (Edward) in her strong sense of the ludicrous and her passionate love for justice." She wrote in 1798 of her hope for Irish liberation in an address to the Irish nation that wasn't published until many years later:

Irishmen, Countrymen, it is Edward FitzGerald's sister who addresses you: it is a woman but that woman is his sister: she would therefore die for you as he did...Yes, this is the moment, the precious moment which must either stamp with Infamy, the name of Irishmen and denote you forever wretched, enslaved to the power of England, or raise the Paddies to the consequence which they deserve and which England shall no longer withhold, to happiness, freedom, glory...

The couple's main residence was Adm. Foley's estate Abermarlais in Carmarthenshire, Wales, which he had purchased in 1795 with his share of the bounty resulting from the capture of a Spanish ship. After his death Lucy lived in Arundel until 1841, when she settled near Marseilles, France, where she spent the remainder of her life. They had no children.

Canaston Wood Camp RCAM

This is a circular enclosure, the northern defence of which has disappeared for a distance of 200 ft. It is situated on the hillside on the north west of Canaston wood where the trees and undergrowth are particularly dense and much obscure the earthwork. The bank is about 500ft Long with an average height of 5ft and a fall of 15ft to a terrace about 10ft in width. On the east the defence is formed by a small stream. The original entrance was probably in the destroyed stretch of bank the present narrow entrance to the south being evidently a forest trackway passing through the enclosed area. About 100 yds south of the camp is a length of parallel banks about 4ft high, on either side of the main path. Whether these are portions of the original work is hard to determine. Fenton (tour 303) speaks of the camp as in form approaching an 'isosceles triangle with one of its angles very obtuse, that which faces the river' Lieut Col W Ll Morgan an ex Commissioner says:- 'This camp is difficult to classify. It approximates to the horse shoe but is unusually large for that class of work. It is of more importance than an ordinary circular enclosure, and again is decidedly on the Hill side. It has been an important work, but is more likely to have been made before than after the conquest'.

The Square stone RCAM

A dressed stone 20in by 20in by 24in now in the yard of Stone Ditch Farm to which it was removed a few years ago from its position in the north hedge of Stone Ditch Lane, about 50yds north of the farm house. It was embedded in the hedge, from which position it fell into the lane. Since its removal it has been whitewashed. While it was still in the hedge it was considered unlucky to pass the stone without touching it. 'It is said to be the stone from which Stone Ditch Lane takes its name. It may well have been part of the pedestal of a cross. There is no markings of any kind on it' (Pem Arch Survey) – visited 8th May 1914

Inscribed stone RCAM

In the British Museum Ms., Stowe 1024, is a sketch of a monolith, stated to have been 2ft 6in long and 17in broad which bore an inscription. Its location is given as Near St Owen's Well in Arberth parish Pembrokeshire,

It has not been found possible to locate this well of St Owen, and the name appears to have passed out of local recollection. If the name of the saint is correctly given by the original draftsman or his copyist, the entry brings forward a new Pembrokeshire saint. It is said that there are four dedications to St Owen in England.

Hoarstone Park RCAM

The fourth field east of Bloomfield, and a quarter of a mile north east of Narberth. Its name though now forgotten points to a former standing stone. Much stone has been removed from its surface in recent years visited 9th May 1914.

Parc Carreg RCAM

Two fields on North Sodston Farm. No explanation of the name is now forthcoming visited 7th May 1914

Carn Mountain Tumulus RCAM

The farm of North Hill (Mr Thomas Harries owner and occupier) is situated at almost the southern- most point of the parish of Narberth South, and a few yards within the boundary line which divided it from the adjoining parish of Begelly. The site is in the district as that which we consider to possess the best claim to be regarded as the locale of the battle of Mynydd Carn.

About 100yds north by west of the dwelling is a low spreading mound which is known to have been dug into for the stone with which the farmstead and buildings are constructed and it is probable that the mound had been the subject of previous attacks over a century ago. Speaking roughly, it is between 4ft and 5ft high and about 150ft in circumference. It was grown over with ragged gorse bushes and presented the appearance of a rough piece of slightly elevated ground which had been left in its pristine condition when the land was enclosed and the field bank formed and carried past it.

It was a matter of common knowledge that the mound already contributed many loads of stone for diverse purposes, but no objects of a different nature were known to have proceeded from it, nor was its real character suspected though the tradition that a battle had been fought in the immediate neighbourhood is current in the district.

In April 1921, Mr Harries who had recently entered in possession, proceeded to rifle the site for stone. Commencing operations on the western side of the mound where previous operations had evidently been undertake, he met with nothing beyond a quantity of rough stones of varying sizes, none heavier than a man could handle with ease. A little later it was decided to begin the stone quarrying on the east side of the mound. This led at once to the finding of a cist containing an urn; which by reason of the unexpected discovery was broken to pieces. Many of the fragments were rescued , and it is hoped that enough exists to admit of its partial reconstruction. A second cist was uncovered close to the first, and two urns were taken out of the cist in perfect condition. News of the discovery became bruited abroad ,and our Assistant Inspecting Officer (Mr Eyre Evans) who was in the neighbourhood proceeded next day to the scene of operations. He was just in time to assist at the disinterment of one of the largest urns that is known to have been discovered in Wales. The urn was inverted and placed upright upon a stone slab. Though somewhat near the surface and more towards the centre of the mound than the previous discoveries, it had unfortunately collapsed beneath the weight of the superincumbent earth, The rim and about 4ins of the neck had resisted the pressure and this upper portion of the vessel was got out entire. The fragments of the body had fallen within the unbroken rim and in the mixture of sherds, ash and soil was found a small urn of the incense cup type. The large urn had been partially filled with the burned ashes of bones, and among the powder and tiny particles was a piece of bone about 3 in long

At the time of writing these lines the entire find has passed into the safe keeping of the National Museum of Wales through the intervention of this Commission.

Tentatively, the mound and its contents may be set down as falling within the late Bronze age

Molleston Back Camp RCAM

This is a pear shaped enclosure standing 400ft above ordnance datum on a field known as SKerry Back, about 500yds west of MollestonBack farm house. It lies east and west, its main axis being 360ft; its greatest breadth is 180ft. The defence consists of a much decayed earth bank, a ditch on the south side, and two low banks which protect the eastern entrance. The enclosing bank is only 2ft high, its entire length is 1,150ft and its fall 6ft to a shallow ditch. The ditch on the south and southeast sides has an average width of 10ft; on the other sides all traces of it have gone. The enclosed area is level. The entrance is 60ft wide, with long slopes to both banks. About 12ft outside the entrance are two oval mounds or platforms, that to the north being 4ft high and the other to the south 6ft high. The distance between them is 60ft —visited 6th May 1914.

Narberth Mountain Camp. RCAM

A crescent shaped earthwork 100yds south east of Narberth Union workhouse. The camp is formed of a rampart nearly 300ft long, with an exterior well defined ditch 6ft wide. It is difficult to conceive the purpose for which it was constructed; it could not have been intended for a defensive work visited 5th May 1914

Sentence Castle RCAM

A circular mound with no sign of Bailey, close to the village of Templeton. The mound rises some 350ft, the diameter of the summit 20ft; it has a sloping depression in the centre. The ditch was a width of 10ft and an outer drop of 5ft to the ground level. The whole work is thickly overgrown with vegetation. The fields to the north and west are known as the Castles – visited 5th May 1914.

NB 'Tradition runs that the Templars held a court on this camp, hence the name' (Pem Arch Survey)

Poyer's Arms RCAM

A two storey cottage which has been modernised. Until recently the Kitchen mantel beam bore the date of 1672. In the same room is a stone corbel which once supported the floor of the room above. The stone chimney stack is built outside the line of the front wall of the cottage. visited 5th May 1914

Cross Shaft RCAM

Until recently there stood in the yard of Stockwell House in Templeton village, a stone cross shaft 25in high. It has been removed to the adjoining burial ground of the modern St John's Church and there re-erected together with its plain octagonal base stone. The shaft is octagonal in form and has no ornaments – visited 5th May 1914

Site of Hospice RCAM

Before the erection of the modern Church of St John, in the village of Templeton, there stood on the site an old building which had long been used as a Unitarian meeting house . The Knights Templar appear to have possessed land here – hence the place name-- on which stood a small hostel or hospice – visited 5th May 1915

Chapel Hill Lane; Greater , Little, and upper Chapel Hill RCAM

Three farmhouses and their approaches about ¾ miles east of Templeton village. The origin of the names is not obvious, and no tradition of the presence of an ecclesiastical building in the near neighbourhood appears to exist. It is however, to be noted that a footpath leads from the east end of Chapel Hill land to two fields in Ludchurch parish known as Great and Little Church Park

Mining

Un-named Mine SN 103.136. Reputed silver mine at Eastwood Farm. No historical detail; fairly late, displays shot holes. Trial adit in quarry 200 yards north west of farmhouse (open). Hollow ground reportedly found during fencing operations in valley south east of Peter's Lake Bridge.

Nash

St Mary

This was originally a very ancient Church and it has been suggested that it dated back to the building of Upton Castle. Fenton gives a picture of it being very dilapidated in his day but I was unable to find any illustrations or description. I walked round looking many times, a joy in the early spring with its carpet of flowers. Only once though did I find any clues and then I could have been mistaken. Snow was on the ground and there was a line on the north side about two feet wide parallel from the present Church wall. It is suggested that the effigies in Upton Chapel and the font were originally in this Church which was the parish Church while the Chapel was just for the convenience of the Castle.

This is a modern Church possessing nothing of Archaeological interest. The 13 century recumbent effigy of a knight, which formerly lay in the churchyard, "neglected and overgrown with moss" (Glynne "Notes" Arch Camb 1888, V v 125) has been removed to Upton Chapel visited 11th May 1922

"This Church seems to have been wholly rebuilt, except that some portions of the original walls are partially slated. It is a plain, oblong building, with square headed windows and a modern Bell cot at the west end. In the Churchyard is a fine sepulchral effigy of a knight, neglected and overgrown with moss, with a helmet of 15c and his hand on his sword. There is also an old font with a square bowl"

"Archeologia Cambrensis 5786 Vol V 5th Series, August 4th 1871;"

I took many services at this Church and for me it was always an enjoyable occasion. The Church is situated way off the main road along a narrow lane leading to what I believe was once a manor house but is now a farmhouse belonging to the Gibby family where Mrs Gibby serves tea and biscuits to all the congregation after the service. The Church one side of the lane and the farm is the other but just over the graveyard wall is a large pond with the remains of a mill. In spring the graveyard is a carpet of flowers and I often sat there before a service and mentally rewrote my sermon.

The Organ (played for services when I took them by Mrs Skelton wife of Canon Skelton of Upton Castle who also chose the hymns and could always be counted on to pick ones that the congregation liked and could sing) is situated on a gallery at the west end and access is gained via very narrow stairs from the porch. The seating is rather unusual in that it consists of box pews, in two of which half of the occupants would be sitting with their backs to the altar. One of the double box pews was always occupied by Mrs Gibby but also sometimes as well by her grandchildren when they came to visit. In Winter she had a single bar electric fire in the double pew as sometimes the Church could be cold (In temperature maybe but there was always a warm friendly atmosphere there)

There is a two decker pulpit with narrow steps up.

The original Church dates back to at least 1291, and had some fine carving and effigies, one of a lady, and one of a Knight in mail armour but by the time of Fenton's visit in 1810 parts of the Church had deteriorated so badly that they had been pulled down. The effigy of the knight was removed to Upton Chapel after spending years lying in the churchyard overgrown with moss.

“On the way from Pembroke to Tenby I visited the Church of Nash, to which Upton was a Chapel, where I have been informed there was an effigy of a Crusader. a great rarity here The Church of Nash, though certainly ancient as containing the remains of one of the earliest followers of the crusades, and founded, no doubt, by the first baronial possessor of Upton Castle , probably the Crusader himself, neither has, nor appears to have had, any steeple, or other ornament whatever, being the meanest religious structure I have seen in this Hundred.

We found the knight of the cross, disgracefully lying without the north Church wall under the dripping of the eaves, amidst the rubbish of an aisle that, being grown ruinous was taken down a few years ago by the patron of the living, and then Rector. The parts of the figure were of good sculpture and the minute wire armour particularly well executed. It was of purplish stone and of large size; the face was entirely broken off.

On examining the old man who had been employed to repair the Church and stop up the doorway leading to the Chapel, I was told that the Palestine warrior originally laid on a bench at the North end of the dilapidated aisle.

To the discovery of his name and rank, there was nothing to help us; but the tradition was that he died abroad and that his body was landed at Coshaston Pill, little below the Church and that he was an Admiral and a giant; the effigy giving some countenance to the latter part of the story, being represented much above the ordinary stature.

One thing I have always puzzled about. I took many Services and always robed in the little vestry. It always seemed out of keeping with the rest of the Church as if it was a lot older.

Nash Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis 1834

Nash, a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 miles (N. E.) from Pembroke; containing 128 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in the southern part of the county, and near a small inlet from Milford Haven, comprises a moderate portion of land, in a good state of cultivation. Its scenery, though not distinguished by any striking peculiarity of feature, is generally pleasing; and the adjacent country affords some interesting objects, and some views which are not destitute of beauty. The great turnpike-road leading from Narberth to Pembroke passes through the southern part of the parish. The living is a rectory, with the living of Upton annexed, rated in the King's Books at £6. 12. 8½.; present net income, £130, with a glebe-house; patron, the Rev. William P. Evans: the tithes of the benefice have been commuted for a rent-charge of £80; and there is a glebe of about twenty-seven acres, valued at £55 per annum. The Church is a very ancient structure, remarkable for the rude simplicity of its architecture, and is said to have been erected by one of the earliest proprietors of Upton Castle. A Sunday school is held in the Church.

1839 NeVERN – Topographical Dictionary of Wales

NeVERN, a parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Newport, and 8 (S. W. by W.) from Cardigan, the post-town; containing 1625 inhabitants. The name is derived from the river NeVERN, so called from the Welsh

Niver, "a number," on account of its being formed by the union of numerous rivulets that intersect the parish, and flow together in one considerable stream into St. George's Channel.

Martin de Tours, a Norman knight, who, having attended William the Conqueror, was rewarded for his service by a grant of territory on the coast of Devonshire, embarked an expedition for the invasion of such parts of the principality as he might find most easily assailable, and landing his troops at Fishguard, made himself master of the lordship of Kemmes. For the protection of his newly acquired territory, which became one of the lordships marcher, he either erected a fortress at this place, or strengthened one previously built, which he made his residence, and which descended to his son William. The latter, however, having strengthened his interest by marrying the daughter of Rhÿs ab Gruffydd, abandoned this seat of his father's, called Llanhyvor Castle, of which there are some remains on a Hill above the Church, for one that he had built on a more magnificent scale at Newport.

The parish is very large, extending from the foot of the Percelly mountains to the shore of Cardigan bay. It lies in a beautifully diversified and fertile district, and comprehends some of the most romantic scenery in the county of Pembroke, being intersected by a deep wooded dingle, along which flows the NeVERN, whose banks are occasionally formed into rocks of fantastic character, while in the lower part, near Newport bay, stands the village: the prospects from the higher grounds are also pleasing and extensive. The road from Newport to Cardigan passes near NeVERN, and the greater portion of the parish is inclosed and cultivated: the total area is 14,522a. 13p. The coast is generally bold, and in some parts precipitous, with a good depth of water close to the shore. There were formerly several ancient mansions, inhabited by some of the most opulent families in the county; but nearly all of them have been abandoned by their proprietors, and are at present in the occupation of tenants. Llwyngwair is an elegant mansion, pleasantly situated on the margin of the river NeVERN, and within about a mile of its mouth. Among the other seats are Burry, Cwmgloyn, and HênllŷMoor ; the last was once the residence of the ancient lords of Kemmes, and of that distinguished antiquary and scholar, George Owen, Lord of Kemmes, in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I.

The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £8, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor; present net income, £174, with a glebehouse: the impropriation belongs to Mrs. Atwood. The advowson, which was appendant to the lordship of Kemmes, was alienated by deed, bearing date 1347, to Bishop Hoton, who appropriated it to his new College of St. Mary at St Davids, from which, on the suppression of religious houses, it reverted to the crown. The Church is said to have been originally founded in the sixth century, by St. Brynach, or Byrnach, to whom it is dedicated, and to have been rebuilt by some of the Norman lords of Kemmes: the present is an ancient and venerable structure, in the Norman style of architecture. In the churchyard, to the south of the porch, is an ancient British cross, elaborately wrought, and bearing two inscriptions: the shaft consists of a single stone, thirteen feet high, two feet four inches broad, and one foot seven inches thick; it is increased in height by a circular top, a separate piece of stone, marked with a cross, and is carved on all sides with ornaments and knots of various shapes. On the north side of the churchyard was another stone, six feet high, with the inscription "Vitiani Emeriti," but this has been for some time removed. In the Chapelry of Kilgwyn, in the parish, is a Chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Mary ; and there are places of worship in the parish for Baptists, Independents, and Calvinistic Methodists. Nine Sunday schools are held, two of them in connexion with the Established Church. Mr. William Rogers, of Kensington, bequeathed £800 in the three per cents. to the poor, the dividends arising from which, amounting to £24 per annum, are annually distributed according to the will, in barley and beef, on the 21st of December. Near Pentre Evan, in the parish, are the remains of one of the largest cromlechs in the principality; the table-stone is eighteen feet in length and nine feet wide, and is supported on two or three coarse upright stones, varying from seven to eight feet high. It is considered not to be surpassed in size by any other Druidical monument in Wales, except the cromlech at Dyfryn, in the parish of St. Nicholas, Glamorganshire. Several other Druidical remains are yet to be seen in and near NeVERN.

1870-72, John Marius Wilson's Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales

Nevern, or Nefern, a village and a parish in the district of Cardigan and county of Pembroke. The village stands on the rivulet Nevern, in a picturesque reach of deep wooded Valle, 2 miles E N E of Newport, and 8 S W of Cardigan r. station; and was once a borough, governed by a portreeve and burgesses. The parish is divided into the quarters of Cregie, Kilgwyn, Morva, and Trewern; and its post town is Newport, under Haverfordwest. Acres, 14, 637; of which 115 are water or foreshore. Real property of Cregie, £1, 430; of Kilgwyn, £1, 346; of Morva, £3, 1 54; of Trewern, £1, 751. Pop. of the whole in 1851, 1, 642; in 1861, 1, 436. Houses, 315. The decrease of pop. was caused by the migration of agricultural labourers. The property is much subdivided. Llanhyfer Castle stood on an eminence above the village; is said to have been the chief palace of the princes of Dyfed; was probably the residence of Martin de Tours, before he married the daughter of Rhys ap Gruffydd; was a square structure, with a bastion at each angle; towered aloft, on one side, from the rim of a rocky ravine, and was defended, on the other sides, by a deep fosse excavated in the solid rock; and has left some traces. A mansion of the time of Henry VII. was the seat of Sir James ap Owain, passed to occupants of other families, and is now a farm-house. Llwyngwair and Henllys are present chief residences. A bridge, called Pont-Baldwyn, crosses the Nevern rivulet; and is said to have been the first or one of the earliest places at which Archbishop Baldwin and Giraldus preached the crusades. Pentre-Evan, about 1½ mile from the village, is a remarkably large cromlech; has a top-stone measuring 18 feet by 9; is so high that six persons on horse-back can be sheltered under it; and is surrounded by a rude Druidical circle. 150 feet in circumference. Another cromlech, with a furrow in the top-stone, is at Llech-y-Dribedd. The living is a vicarage, united with the Chapelry of Kilgwyn, in the diocese of St Davids. Value, £240.* Patron, the Lord Chancellor. The Church is Norman, in tolerable condition, with a tower; has an unpaved floor, which has been gradually raised fully 7 feet above the original level by frequent interments; and contains a coffin-lid, with an early Greek cross. The churchyard is planted with yew-trees; and contains a very fine cross of the 9th century, 2 feet broad, 1½ foot thick, 13 feet high, circular at the top, and carved on all sides with knot-work. Charities, £24.

Nevern stream rises far away on the slopes of Fryn-y-Fawr, whence, after pursuing a picturesque course below Pencelly forest, it finds its way by many a 'crankling nook' to Nevern, where it is spanned by a graceful old stone bridge, whose buttresses are shrouded in luxuriant ivy.

Over this same bridge we presently take our way, passing the lowly village school-house, whence the sing-song iteration of young voices salutes our ears through wide-open windows. In another minute we find ourselves at the churchyard wicket, where we pause awhile to look about us and take our bearings.

The village of Nevern is situated in the richly-wooded glen of the Duad, or Nevern Brook, and is surrounded by some of the most charming scenery in the county. The luxuriant groves of Llwyngwair afford shelter from the strong sea winds, while the purple shoulders of Precelly sweep upward in graceful folds to the lofty southern horizon. The picturesque peak of Carn Englyn forms a prominent feature in the landscape; and, separated from it by the deep, narrow Valle of the Clydach, rises Carnedd Meibion Owen, a rocky monticle that reminds one strongly of the Dartmoor Tors.

Time was, 'tis said, when this village of Nevern took precedence of its rival neighbour Newport. In those early days Nevern was a borough town, having its own portreeve with courts of government, and eighteen 'burgages' to manage its affairs. Above the townlet rose the protecting walls of Llanhyvor Castle, a fortalice long regarded, so to speak, as a precious gem in the diadem of every South wallian prince. A steep grassy knoll alone marks the site where this important Castle stood.

But it is time to look at Nevern Church. Dedicated to St. Byrnach, this ancient structure presents, with its gray walls peeping amidst masses of dark foliage, a picturesque and venerable appearance. The western tower, though of no great height, is of vast breadth and substance, extending to the full width of the Church, and having a projecting stair-turret upon its northern side. In this tower hangs a peal of six very musical bells.

Approaching the south porch, we pass beneath a dense avenue of ancient yews, which even at noontide cast a gloomy shade around. Though lacking aisles, the Church has shallow transepts, that on the north being called the Glasdwr Chapel, while the south transept is appropriated to the use of Trewern, an old mansion in the vicinity.

This Trewern Chapel has a solidly groined stone ceiling and elegantly proportioned windows, with a projecting turret for the stairway, leading to an upper chamber,. Upon either side the chancel is a sort of shallow bay, lighted by a narrow pointed window, a characteristic feature of Pembrokeshire churches. The sacred edifice is provided with a pair of silver chalices dated respectively 1696 and 1733, the gifts of former parishioners.

Near the south-east angle of the Trewern Chapel rises the ancient Celtic cross .

This curious monument goes by the name of St. Byrnach's Stone. It stands upwards of 10 feet in height, and is overlaid with the interlacing ornament peculiar to these structures. So boldly and deeply are the patterns incised, as to be little the worse for ten centuries of wind and weather, the hoary lichens that cling to the rugged surface of the monolith serving but to enhance its venerable aspect.

Anent this ancient stone, there is a quaint tradition which tells how, in olden times, the cuckoo was wont to first sound his note in this locality on the day- of the patron saint, April 7.

' I might well here omit,' says George Owen, ' an old report as yet fresh of this odious Bird, that in the old world the parish priest of this Church would not begin Mass until the Bird — called the citizen's ambassador — had first appeared, and began her note on a stone called St. Byrnach's Stone, being curiously wrought with sundry- sort of knots, standing upright in the churchyard of this parish ; and one year staying very Long, and the priest and the people expecting her accustomed coming (for I account this Bird of the feminine gender), came at last, lighting on the said stone — her accustomed preaching-place — and being scarce able once to sound the note, presently fell dead.'

It is somewhat reassuring to be told by the same authority that ' this vulgar tale, although it concerns in some sort Church matters, you may either believe or not without peril of damnation.'

Quitting the pleasant precincts of the Church, we pursue a crooked lane that skirts the Green mounds of the 'Castell,' and, turning thence past a solitary- thatched cottage, make our way along a hollow tree- shaded pathway. Keeping a sharp lookout upon every side, we presently espy the object of our search, the form of a cross, half obliterated by ivy sprays and tufts of rushy grass, being seen rudely graven upon the high sandstone bank by the lane side ; while a sort of hollow kneeling-place can be distinguished in the rock at the bottom of the cross.

For we are now upon the line of an ancient pilgrims' way, whose course is marked by well-worn tracks in the soft red sandy rock ; and this solitary cross calls up visions of the mediaeval wayfarer pausing upon his journey to St Davids Shrine, to invoke before Croes Byrnach the benediction of that influential saint.

Retracing our steps to Nevern, we call a halt at the Trewern Arms, a modest hostelry so near the stream that its waters play a pleasant accompaniment during the course of our homely meal. Then, with energies recruited, we plunge into a shadowy woodland path that leads to Pont-y-Baldwyn, a bridge that spans the rippling stream at a point where, according to tradition.

Archbishop Baldwin preached the crusade in company with Giraldus Cambrensis.

From Pont-y-Baldwyn we follow a farm road that leads us to Henllys, a place memorable in Pembrokeshire annals as the birthplace of that industrious chronicler and local antiquary, George Owen of Henllys. Of his curious and fascinating work entitled 'The Description of Pembrokeshire,' we have largely availed ourselves Throughout these present pages. George Owen appears to have come of a stout old country stock. His father is said to have died a centenarian, after begetting a family of some twenty children. Both George Owen and his father before him held the ancient and honourable office of Lord of Kemaes.

Nevern . One of the prettiest hamlets in Pembrokeshire. There is an interesting motte and Bailey Castle on the river spur above the hamlet but the focus of interest lies in the beautiful grouping of Church, vicarage, old school, bridge inn (the "Trewern Arms") and cottages around the river; and fields, paddocks and wooded slopes are essential parts of the settlement. The Church, with its squat Norman tower, is full of interest. In the churchyard the massive St. Brynach's Cross (dating from the 10th century AD) is much photographed, while visitors also flock to see the famous bleeding yew trees which shade the path to the Church door. Outside the churchyard gate there is a mounting-block for horsemen, and halfway up the Hill to the west there is an ancient pilgrims cross engraved in the solid rock.

There is a resident Clergyman. It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 6d to 8d a day with food and 1s a day on their own finding. The moral character is regarded as good. There are three resident land proprietor and 3 farmers paying over £100 per annum rent. Many of the population cannot read or write.

The parish of Nevern contains 14,522 acres, it is an agricultural district : population very poor; and there is no endowed school in the parish; and there is no one to contribute towards the maintenance of a schoolmaster John Jones M.A., Vicar of Nevern

Mrs Bevans Circulating School. On the 25th of January I visited the above school. The children were not present. The school was held in Cilgwyn Chapel, which is a Chapel of ease to Nevern Church. I examined some of the writing of the pupils, which was pretty Fair. The master seemed to me to be a quiet painstaking man David Lewis Assistant

Village School On the 25th of January I visited the above school. It was held in a wretched schoolroom near the Church; the room and furniture were in the worst possible state of repair. There were only 10 boys present at the time of my visit. I heard 8 read the 1st chapter of St Johns Gospel; not one of them read with anything approaching to ease; they were excessively ignorant; three only out of the 10 could repeat the Lords Prayer in Welsh correctly. Not one of them knew any one of the Ten Commandments. The schoolmaster was a complete cripple upon crutches, although quite a young man, and knew very little English. Three of them answered questions in the multiplication table and worked a few sums in addition correctly, but I could get no further answers. David Lewis Assitant

1859 Parish Church of Nevern (St Brynach) August 3rd Glynne

A large Church in a lovely situation in a richly wooded valley, through which runs the Nevern river. It comprises a nave with south aisle and a northern Chapel, a long chancel and a western tower. The form is rather irregular and the architecture rude, but it is a larger Church than most in the neighbourhood. There are two arches between the nave and the south aisle(which does not reach quite to the west) of very plain pointed form , with a rude square pier, and there is also a transverse arch across the aisle.the chancel arch is also pointed. The chancel is of fine proportions,and has both on the north west and south west a projection opening to the interior by flat arches in the thickness of the wall. On the north of the chancel is a two light Middle Period window , and another similar one closed; also a Third Period one of two lights . Most of the other windows are debased and modernised with sashes . The tower is large but coarse, with a battlement and a square turret at the south east; also a rough corbel table under the parapet. Most of the openings are slits; the belfry window is square headed. Some of the tower is of slates, and there is a fine cross in the churchyard , which is most picturesque and lovely.

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Brynach-- RCAM

The Church is cruciform in plan, consisting of chancel 48ft by 18ft with a shallow tomb recesses on the north and south sides , nave 72ft by 24ft north transepy (capel Glastir), south transept (Henllys Chapel” with priest's chamber above , low western tower and south porch. The structure generally is late Perpendicular. The windows have been renewed or largely restored. In the chancel arch are an aumbrey and a piscina. The Henllys Chapel, which has a groined vault, is separated from the nave by an arcade to two bays with pointed arches. In the west wall is a low arched doorway giving access to the turret stairs leading to the chamber above the vaulting. This low room 27ft by 12ft is lighted by a circular quatrefoiled window in the east wall. The north transept contains a piscina. The nave opens to the tower by a pointed arch. The tower is corbelled and battlemented; it is of two storeys, with a turret in the south east angle containing sixty steps. The upper storey has four windows of two lights having stone louvres. The angles on the west side of the tower have stepped buttresses which reach to within a foot of the parapet, similar in character to those in the adjacent Church of Newport. In the west wall is a four light window. The font is modern. In the exterior south wall of the nave is a slightly defaced corbel with male mask. The burial ground contains a number of fine yew trees. In the exterior north wall of the nave is a small consecration cross –visited 1st July 1914.

The long nave and chancel may be all of the 15c as no features are earlier than that. There are transcriptal Chapels on each side, that on the south being rib-vaulted in two bays. The pier and two arches are Victorian insertions below a wider, flatter original single arch. Two Chapel windows have an Ogham stone and another tomb-stone as sills. The west tower is 16c. Some restoration was carried out in 1863. South of the Church is a very fine Celtic Cross of c1000.

1377 28 Aug., 1377, Nicholas de Audele [son of the above mentioned James de Audele] obtained licence from the King to alienate in mortmain the advowson of the Church of Nevern in Wales to Adam Houghton, Bishop of St Davids, who, at the same time, was granted license to appropriate the Church.—Pat. Rolls.

1380, Bishop Adam Houghton united Nevern and other churches, and appropriated them to the chantry of St. Mary at St Davids, subject to the annual payment of £10 towards the fabric of the Cathedral. It appears that the Bishop did not obtain the necessary licence for this grant to the chantry, as on 28 Feb., 1389, the master and chaplain as of the chantry, at the intercession of William, Archbishop of Canterbury, and on payment of 40 marks, obtained pardon for this breach of the law Pat. Rolls.

1596 On the dissolution of the chantry of St. Mary , the Church of Nevern came into the hands of the Crown from whom on 2 Dec., 1596, a lease of the rectory was obtained by Thomas Birt, Robert Birt, and John Birt, junior, for their lives at the annual rent of £33 13s. 4d. and a fine of £13 6s. 8d.—State Papers.

1291 this Church with its Chapel was assessed at £16 for tenths to the King.—Taxatio.

There are no fewer than eight pilgrimage Chapels in Nevern parish mentioned in George Owen's list, most of which were then in ruins. Their names were Capell St. Thomas , Capell St. Fredde, Capell Gwenfrdn, Capell Wenddith Capell Reall, Capell Sadric, Capell Kilgwin, and Capell St. George.

Capell Kilgwin, now called Cilgwyn, is dedicated to St. Mary , and is now annexed to the vicarage of Nevern to which living it appears to have been united as far back as 1291, as in the Vetus Valor [Taxation of Pope Nicholas] the valuation of ' Navam cum Capella ' is stated to be £16.

Extract for Nevern Parish Church The Religious census of 1851.

Nevern Church, dedicated to St. Brynach, a Welsh Saint, of the 6th century, and a contemporary of St David. The architecture was Norman originally. In 1809 a few of the Gothic were replaced by modern (or parlour) windows. In 1819 the entire of the remaining windows were replaced in like manner, the roof ceiled, etc. In the south wall is the following notice: "The Body of the Church rebuilt A.D. 1819. The Rev. Dd. Griffiths Vicar, J. E. Evans, esq., E. W. Jones, esq., W. Symonds, Gent., Mr. Vaughan, Church-wardens".

Nevern Village consists of only six small Cottages, Parsonage and the Church. N.B. Within the circuit of one quarter of a mile from the Church are Eleven cottages, one Mill and one Farm. The remaining Cottages and Farm house are distant from the Church from about one mile and upwards, as far, at least, as six miles. The parish is mountainous and the Population scattered, and their living at a great distance from the Church is the reason why there is only morning service on Sundays (every Sunday at ten o'clock in the morning), Christmas Day, Good Friday, etc. The Congregations in the Church are larger or smaller according to the state of the weather. In dry weather especially on Sacrament Sunday the congregation amounts to 300 on an average. The number of communicants is upwards of 100 monthly.

John Jones, M.A. Vicar.

NB. The Lay Impropriator, who does not reside in the Parish, contributes nothing towards the spiritual wants of the Parishioners, save and except a few Bottles of Wine at Easter, which he, as well as the Vicar, in conformity to an old custom, gives for the Table of the Lord's Supper.

The Parish of Nevern is divided into Four Quarters, or Districts, called Morfa Quarter, Crugiaiu Quarter, Trewern Quarter and Kilgwyn Quarter. In each of which Quarters there was formerly a Church or Chapel, belonging to private Families, but recognizing Nevern as being the mother or Parish Church. None of these Chapels now remain, save and except Kilgwyn, which has never been endowed, and over which the Bishop of the Diocese has not, it is said, any jurisdiction, as over the mother or Nevern Church. The Registrar of the Diocese can find no account of Kilgwyn Church among the Papers in his Registry, and the Churchwardens of Nevern Parish maintain that they have no right to contribute from the Church Rates towards keeping Kilgwyn Church in repairs. There is at present no private Family, or Mansion, claiming possession of the Church. It would be a great blessing to Kilgwyn Quarter if the Church was endowed and a Clergyman appointed to it. The shell of the building is in good repairs, it having been lately repaired by public subscriptions; but the inside is destitute of Pews, Forms, etc. a few Benches only and a wretched Pulpit and a reading Desk are its present furniture.

Timbrell. A frosted cup with baluster stem, now in the possession of the Fishmongers' Company supplied the author of " Old English Plate" with this maker's Mark

The bowl of the Nevem chalice is straight-sided with slight lip, and measures 5 in. in diam. and 4 in. in depth. The stem which stands on a plain moulded base carries a slight knob below the middle. The stem has been strengthened by means of a wooden plug. The Paten cover measures 7 in. in diameter, weighs 7 oz. 15 dwts, and is 1 in. in height. The inscription is like that on the chalice but the word " perpetuum" is here " perpetuum".

It is the Mark of David Willaume in the Pall Mell and is given in O. E. P. at 1796. Height, 3 in.; diam., 9 in. Weight, 38 oz. 7 dwts and 39 oz. 5 dwts respectively. Both patens are inscribed " The Gift of Mis. Martha Griffith daughter of Mr. Edward Griffith of Glaster To the Parish of Nevern in 1733 ". In the centre of each is engraved a shield of arms with mantling and crest. Mr. Egerton Allen writes "After the best search I am able to make I have failed to identify the family of Griffith of Glaster.

Chalice No. 3, is a Bell-shaped cup bearing the Hall Mark of 1784 with maker's Mark T. C in a plain oblong stamp ; height, 8 in.; diam. of bowl, 4 in.; depth, 4 in.; weight, 13 oz. 1$ dwts. Inscribed Crosses

1859 The great cross in Nevern Churchyard --Arch Camb 1860 p 58 J.O. Westwood

The little village of Nevern in Pembrokeshire , possesses many points of interest both to the lover of nature and the antiquary. The charming situation of the village was admired by all who visited it during the recent meeting of the Cambrian Archaeological Association, whilst the beautiful workmanship and large size of the carved and inscribed cross, standing near the south side of the Church, attracted the especial attention of the members.

This cross is equalled only by two other crosses in Wales, namely, that at Carew in Pembrokeshire, and the Maen Achwynfan near NewMarket, in Flintshire,- all three exhibiting the same general form and features.

My first acquaintance with this cross is now of several years date, and extends back to the incumbency of the Rev J Jones (Tegid), my visit to whom recalled scenes of former Oxford days, and who subsequently furnished me with the following measurements of the cross :-- Height from the surface of the ground to the top of the shaft 10ft; from the top of the shaft to the cross 10in; height of cross 24 ½ in; breadth of the shaft at the base 27 in; in the middle 24in at the top 22 in; width of the cross 24 ½ in. The shaft is formed of a squared block of stone, the base having a slightly widened portion and the top narrowed obliquely on the west face; the north and south sides are not quite so wide as the east and west faces. It will be seen that each of the two principal faces, east and west, has a narrow space above the two lower ornamented compartments inscribed with letters, easily decipherable but not so easily intelligible. That on the east side has the letters
e

Whilst that on the west is inscribed
d n f

I must admit my inability to explain the meaning of these letters, which are represented not in Roman capitals nor in the minuscule form, but in that peculiar alphabet which is found in all the earliest Christian British inscriptions at Llantwit &c., and which agree with the letters of the Gospels of St Chad, MacRegol, Lindisfarne, and in the grandest Irish manuscripts, such as the Book of Kells. The inscriptions have also been given in Bishop Gibsons and Goughs editions of Camdens Britannia, without any attempt to explain them.

The ornamentation of the four sides of this cross is of the kind to which the tern Runic knots and circles has been perpetually misapplied. It is, however, not of Scandinavian but of Celtic origin, and is found in all the earliest Christian British and Irish monuments both of stone and metal, as well as on manuscripts. That it does occur, indeed , on some stone monuments with Runic inscriptions in the Isle of Man and elsewhere is true; but it nowhere occurs in Scandinavia nor in Teutonic countries; and therefore , as indeed historic records prove, its occurrence with Runic inscriptions is due to Scandinavian visitors adopting the ornamentation with the religion of the country they resort to. It will be seen from the engravings that the shaft of the cross consists on each side of a series of compartments, each containing a different arranged interlaced ribbon or other characteristic pattern, thus resembling the ornamented shafts of some gigantic initial letters in the early MSS. Of the Gospels above alluded to, which may indeed be said almost truly to represent the shafts of these great crosses reduced to the size of a miniature, thus proving the identity of the workmanship, as well as of the workmen, by whom both classes of monuments were executed. Taking the representations of the Nevern cross as they occur it will be seen that, in addition to the endless variety of the interlaced ribbon patterns, (each ribbon having an incised line running along its centre) the south side has at its base a raised pattern of classical design, resembling the Grecian fret of which a larger specimen occurs at the top of the west side. Above this fret on the south side is a curious diagonal pattern, formed of narrow raised and angulated lines, the general effect produced being that of a St Andrews cross with the spaces between the arms filled in with four pairs of incised Ts placed obliquely, with the tops of each pair placed in opposition to each other. This is also the character of the bottom compartment on the east side, but here only one-fourth of the pattern is represented and consequently there is only one pair of Ts similarly placed with raised knobs in the open spaces. It will be seen that if the pattern on the south side were to be doubled or quadrupled the oblique Ts would form a series of xs giving somewhat of the character of the one in the compartment on the east side, above the inscription. These diagonal patterns have very much of a Chinese character about them, as is also especially the case with the compartment above the inscription on the west side, and that at the bottom of the north side, where four Ts are so arranged as to form a series of steps in the spaces between the letters. The pattern at the bottom of the west side is another modification of these diagonal designs, and is of common occurrence on the Llantwit and other early decorated stones.

The head of the cross is of elegant proportions, the four arms of equal size, short, widened at the ends, with the spaces below the arms sunk, the depressed parts with a raised boss in the centre of each, as is also the case with the centre of the cross itself, which is ornamented with an interlaced ribbon pattern, as is also the narrow space at the base of the cross.

With reference to the date of the cross it is difficult, in the absence of direct evidence, to arrive at anything like a precise idea. I have stated that both in its palaeographic and ornamental characters it agrees with the Llantwit stones, and MSS of the seventh and eighth centuries, but its general form agrees rather with that of the later Irish crosses; and as in such outlying districts as Nevern it is likely that little change was made until the Norman period led to the introduction of Gothic art, it is not impossible that this cross may be as recent as the tenth, eleventh, or early part of the twelfth century. I do not think a more modern date can be assigned to it than the latter of these periods, but would rather refer it to the eleventh.

The Cross was scheduled as an ancient monument in 1950.

RCAM 1923 St Brynach's Cross

The high standing cross known as St Brynach's Cross (the inscription upon it proves, however, to have been erected to the memory of a local saint or chieftain of the Welsh district of Maenor Mauen), stands near the south door of the Church. The shaft is 10ft above the level, the cross head is 24 ½ ins, the breadth of the shaft at its base is 27in, at the top 22 ins, the width is 24 ½ ins “the shaft of the cross consists on each side of a series of compartments, each containing a different arrangement of ribbon. The head of the cross is of elegant proportions, the four arms of equal size, widened at the ends with the spaces below the arms sunk, the depressed parts, with a raised boss in the centre of each. As is also the case with the centre of the cross itself, which is ornamented with an interlaced ribbon pattern, as is also the narrow space at the base of the cross” (Westwood Lapid walliae, p 100) It has been frequently described in Arch Camb. The editor Mr Romilly Allen noting it as “the most perfect example of its class now remaining in Wales”

The Vitaliani Stone RCAM 1923

This stone is now placed in the porch of the Church; it originally stood on the north side of the churchyard, It bears an inscription in Latin and Ogam. The Latin reads VITALIANI EMERETO (to the well earned honour of Vitalianus), the letters running across the face of the stone in two parallel lines. The Ogam characters Read VITALIANI (the monument) of Vitalianus.

Sir John Rhys regarded it as “probably one of the oldest of our bilingual monuments”

(Pembrokeshire Antiquities 1897 p5;) Owen Pemb I p 328 states that the stone is “supposes to be as early as the 5th century”

The Maglocvnus Stone RCAM 1923

This bilingual stone , now in the Henllys Chapel, was found built into the wall of the staircase leading to the priest's chamber by the Cambrian Archaeological Association when at Nevern in 1906. a little later it was carefully fixed in its present position. The stone measures 5ft 2 ½ in long and 13 ½ inches across its widest part. It is incomplete, a portion of the smaller end having been broken off , probably when it was placed in the staircase wall. The inscription in Roman Capitals runs MAGLOCVNI FILI CLVTORI. The Ogam reads MAGLICUNAS MAGI CLUTAR. The two inscriptions are evidently close renderings of each other, both meaning the monument of Maelog, son of Clydei.

Cross Stone

On the same occasion in 1906 this stone was found in the staircase wall adjoining the Maglocunus slab. It was subsequently removed to the sill of one of the windows in the Henllys Chapel. It was then found to bear an interlaced cross in slight relief, the design occupying the entire stone which is 62 in long by 12 in broad. There is no inscription. The stone also bears a ribbon ornament which is worked into a single knot in a manner unusual and altogether different from the character of the ornament commonly met with on Celtic crosses

Professor Westwood in 1860 described what without doubt is the same stone, which then bore a few more letters and in 1912 Sir John Rhys said of it “the interest attaching to the stone or stones in question is that they are evidence of the existance at one time at Nevern of traces of Roman remains, evidence carrying us back to the Roman occupation, and tending to show that the place was one of some importance prehaps before the Dessi occupied it and found it a convenient basis of communication with Ireland” (Festchrift presented to Prof Kuno Meyer, pp230). There are no grounds for connecting the stone directly with the Romans but it may date from the last years of the Roman occupation of Britain.

Missing stones

In Arch Camb 1860 p53 Prof. Westwood notes that “The interior of the Church at Nevern contains another early relic of British Christianity, in a large slab now used as part of the pavement on the north side of the chancel, inscribed with a Greek cross with a central boss, and with equal short limbs dilated at the ends inscribed within a circle, the two outer incised lines forming which are extended downward below the bottom arm, so as to form a long stem or shaft to the cross. The diameter of this cross is 28in and the width of the stem running down the middle of the slab is 10in.” This stone is not to be traced. It probably disappeared when the Church was restored in 1861. A dim recollection exists of its replacement beneath the chancel flooring.

In 1859 the Cambrian Archaeological Association when visiting the Church, failed to find a stone “said to have stood inside the Church, about 2ft high, and rounded at the top, and bearing certain characters, not more like greek than Roman. The fate of this relic is unknown, and likely to be so, as active enquiries have been made without any success” It may be the same stone as the former.

Rock Cross RCAM 1923.

Cut in rough relief on the face of the naked rock, immediately behing Chwarel Cottage on the road to Frongoch and 100yds west of the parish Church is a equal armed cross of early type. The trees which had long shaded and concealed it were felled during the war, so that the relic and its kneeling place are again visible.

Up the Hill to the west of the Church a stile at the hair-pin bend leads to a path which passes below the Pilgrims' Cross, some 30 yards on. The cross is cut in relief in the living rock and below it is a kneeling recess with a small incised cross. It was probably a wayside shrine on the pilgrim's way from Holywell to St Davids and is now almost unique. In 1949 it was scheduled under the Ancient Monuments Protection Act

In the Northern part of Pembrokeshire there are several earthworks which contain a mound sometimes moated. This peculiarity of form will be found at Castell Pen-y-Allt near Llantood, Plas-y -Merchant near NeVERN, Henllys, Eglwyswrw, Crymmych Arms, Castell Crychydd (the Heron's Castle near Clydey), Parc-y-marl, and Parc-Robert near New moat. In these north country camps we find an indication of the Norman conquerors of the 11th century under Martin of the Towers. We have positive evidence from the Bayeux tapestry that the camps or mottes built by the Normans of that period were circular earthworks enclosing elevated mounds, crowned with wooden castellets.

By far the most perfect specimen of this Castle kind of stronghold is to be found in Llanhyver or NeVERN Castle, this is truly a reconstructed earthwork. Two-thirds of the circumference are protected with an unusually strong foss and vallum the latter forming a sort of curtain wall the other third is defended by a natural declivity artificially scarped. In the south-west of the camp stands an earthen motte or mound which takes the place of the later stone donjon in Norman and Early English work ; this Castle is invaluable as a date-giver, i.e., late eleventh century.

Its history is also very interesting, " when the prynces of Wales possessed the same country Castrum de Lanhever was the chief Castle," the Normans seized and modified the structure " after that Martyn had first wonne the same it was many times disturbed, but Martyn and his issue stucked to yt so close that in the ende they carried yt away from the prynces of Wales." (George Owen). Edward .Laws

1803 Fenton 1914 RCAM Castell Nanhyfer, Nevern Castle

Fenton (Tour p 540) thus describes the situation of this important earthwork: "Above the village [of Nevern] on a Hill, and yet sheltered to the north by a higher ridge, are seen the slight remains or, rather, the site of the Castle, which though almost entirely defaced, exhibits marks of great extent and strength."

The original work consisted of a rampart and ditch to the north and west and a steep natural declivity on the south and east. At a later period a mound was thrown up midway along the rampart, and the earlier ditch, which at intervals cuts through the natural rock, was apparently deepened and widened. The entrance to the original work would seem to be at the south west corner of the rampart and probably had a width of about 15ft. The later mound rises to a height of 25ft. Its summit bears traces of stone foundations, whether of a contemporary shell keep or of a medieval manor house it is impossible to determine without excavations. The original ditch in part covered by the mound has been reconstructed round its outer base ; there is no inner ditch between the mound and the Bailey court .

In 1859 the Cambrian Archaeological Association visited these earthworks and reported that "a considerable extent of walling, internal and external remains in the fosses,etc."

The parish Church is at the foot of the declivity – visited 1st July 1914

Castell Nanhyfer; Nevern Castle

Castell Nanhyfer, an inland promontory enclosure, some 100m east-west by 90m, resting on steep natural slopes and crags on the south-east, is delineated by up to three lines of banks and ditches on the north and west, with a circular mound, about 32m in diameter occupying its north-western angle. The outward banks are the most massive and the northern facade shows remains of a stone revetment. A circular tower, in the region of 6.5m across, has been identified upon the motte summit; the eastern tip of the promontory, rising above precipitous crags, is cut off by a rock-cut ditch, forming a court, about 30m north-south by 20m, defined by stone walls and containing traces of a rectangular structure, possibly a tower. The entrance to the Castle enclosure is thought to have led between the crags on the north, the massive north-facing ramparts, and the stone-walled citadel. Identified as a 12th-early 13th century Castle, possibly of several distinct constructions, thought to have been abandoned in the earlier 13th century. Nevern is dominated by the remains of Castell Nanhyfer. This fine motte-and-Bailey Castle, which began life as an Iron Age promontory fort, was built by the Fitzmartins, the Norman lords of Cemais, in 1191. It was seized by Rhys ap Gruffudd, who was later imprisoned by his sons in the tower which he built. He died there in 1195, bringing to an end Welsh rule in south-west Wales. Castell Nanhyfer is therefore a key but strangely neglected site in Welsh history (RCAHMW, 96-cs-0678).From: Driver, T. 2007. Pembrokeshire: Historic Landscapes from the Air, RCAHMW, 152.

BBC Report 2011 October 4th

RARE pieces of inscribed slate unearthed during a dig at one of the nation's oldest castles may provide valuable clues to life in medieval Wales, experts said yesterday.

Archaeologists involved in a recent excavation on the site of Nevern Castle in the Pembrokeshire Coast National Park believe the markings, dating back more than 800 years, indicate some ritualistic methods of warding off evil.

The slates – complete with stars and other designs scratched on them – were found at the site's 12th century cut-stone entranceway.

Lead archaeologist Dr Chris Caple said: "These inscribed slates are really interesting. They were found in only one place in the Castle and were probably intended to ward off evil."

The recent excavation revealed 12 slates bearing incised designs.

Archaeologists said the scratched markings are interesting for several reasons, but mainly because of the rarity.

"Scratched images from the medieval world are rare, and we can confidently date these to the period 1170-1190 when the stone phase of Nevern Castle was built," added Dr Caple.

"These drawings connect us with the lives and beliefs of masons or labourers who built the Castle. We hardly ever recover evidence about the peasants of the medieval world, and never information about their beliefs and ideas, but these scratched designs are from the imagination of a serf, a farm labourer or a man at arms."

Headed by Dr Caple, of the University of Durham, and Pete Crane from the Pembrokeshire Coast National Park Authority, the team of experts, students and volunteers descended on the site for three weeks in the summer.

It was the fourth year that the site has been excavated in a partnership project between Dr Caple, the National Park Authority, Dyfed Archaeological Trust and Nevern Community Council which owns the site.

Further research on the finds is now being carried out by the Department of Archaeology at the University of Durham.

Work at the site last summer uncovered a large group of buildings thought to date from the 12th century.

It helped provide new details on the history of a Norman fortress – one of the oldest stone castles in Wales – that was built in 1108 along with two towers and three Hall-like buildings that were unearthed.

Until that discovery little of Nevern Castle could be seen. The Castle was built by the Norman marcher Lord Robert Fitz Martin around 1108. The building was destroyed and rebuilt in the 12th century but after 1197 was abandoned.

It is hoped the new discoveries will be secured as part of the communities heritage.

Phil Bennett, the National Park Authority's head of Archaeological heritage, added: "One of the nicest things about these slate pieces is that we are hoping to be able to keep them in Nevern eventually, in the care of the Nevern Community Council."

Work is under way cleaning, revealing and recording the images scratched on the pieces of slate.

Dr Caple added: "In the late 12th century, Nevern would have been an impressive looking Castle and entrance, especially from the south side, and it was clearly visible to all passing along the road between St Davids and Cardigan."

"The work under way on the slates will no doubt provide more fascinating information about the beliefs and ideas of the people who built and lived in the Castle in the late 12th century."

The dig also unearthed information about the phased building of parts of the Castle and revealed that a round Tower thought to have imprisoned the Lord Rhys in 1194 was also the quarters of high status members of the Castle household

Owen William

9th of March , 1574 was buried at Nevern the day after his death.'

George Owen's father, William, was directly descended in the male line from Lucas de Hoda. He married Elizabeth Herbert, who was descended from William, Herbert Earl of Pembroke, the first Welsh, man that was ennobled. William Owen was the first in his family to follow the English fashion of having surnames, and to assume the name of Owen. He lived to a ripe old age, dying, on the 9th of March , 1574, when he was 105 years old, and leaving behind him his son and heir, George Owen, who thus writes on the matter" For experience whereof my dearest ancestor at his death was accounted to have lyved 105 years, and was at his latter dayes lustie of body and always in health, well able to travell and dayly used to walke a good swift pase, 4, 5, or 6 myles a morning for his pleasure and lesse then six yeares before his death, he, taking his journey from the towne of Pembroke towards his house in the country, began his journey a foote, willing his man to bring his horse after him, for that his horse was not then taken (and indeed was not that daye, he having began his journey a foote was forced soe to ende the same and come to his house by one of the clocke, being 20 Miles he carried all his teeth with him to the grave, and a fewee yeares before his death would eat a handfull of nuttes, shells and all he was the Yongest of his ancestours that died the last two descents before him. My mother, alsoe, yet living (God grant it Long (died in 1603.), and two other gentle-women of the same parish, all three in perfect memory, can reckon between them at least 260 yeares, soe helthful is the ayre and soyle.

Owen George of Henllys Kemes wrote Description of Pembrokeshire
Owen George 1552 born at Henllys, in the parish of Nevern, near Newport, Pembrokeshire, in 1552, and died there on 26th August, 1613. It was from Meredydd (who died 1188), ap Gryffydd ap Rhys ap Tewdwr, who lived at Henllys, that the property descended to Nesta, the spouse of Philip, son of Richard de Hoda, and so on in the direct male line to George Owen. Thus he could truly write of Henllys, as he did* It did not appear that any other family or person than my ancestors had ever lived there.* The Owens, continued to live at Henllys till the death of William Owen, the great grandson of George Owen, in 1721. Some time between this and the end of the century Henllys was pulled down, and there is now only part of the foundations, overgrown with grass, that can with difficulty be traced.

George Owen married, in 1573, Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of William Phillips of Picton, Pembrokeshire, by whom he had ten children, the eldest and only surviving son being Owen Alban 26th August, 1613 who succeeded him as Lord of Cemaes.

About his second married there is some confusion. Fenton states in his Pembrokeshire (p. 563), from a MS. alleged to have been written by George Owen himself, that his second spouse was Ann, "daughter of John Gwillim, a French gentleman of Norman descent."

But according to a pedigree signed by Owen himself, his second spouse was Ancred, daughter of Obiled, William of Carmarthen, gent." According to this pedigree, Owen had seven children by her, but Owen himself states that there were twelve children of his second married.

This married with Ancred is corroborated by the Inquisition post mortem of George Owen, in which the jurors further say that certain lands were granted by George Owen by deed d 18th August, 1613, to John Owen of Trecwn and Henry Bowen of Cilgwyn to the use of George Owen and Ancred his spouse and the survivor for life, with remainder to the use of their son Thomas Owen and the heirs of his body, with remainder to the use of their son Rhys Owen, his heirs and assigns." By Ancred George Owen had five sons George, the York Herald, Evan, Chancellor of St David's, William, Thomas, and Rhys. The jurors further state that George Owen died on the 26th day of August last (1613), and that Alban Owen was at the of that Inquisition of the age of thirty-three years. They also further state that Ancred is yet alive." Alban was the only son by the first spouse who lived to maturity there were also several daughters.

According to this Inquisition post mortem taken at the GuildHall, Haverfordwest, on the 4th day of May, 1614, Alban Owen, his son and heir apparent, was on the 24th September, 1596, betrothed to Lettice, daughter of Johanna, and her late Husband William Mercer deceased, and George Owen then covenanted to grant certain houses and lands, etc., to their use for either or both their lives and then to their sons successively in tail male with ultimate remainder to the right heirs of George Owen, before 'the Feast of All Saints then next'. . . . "The jurors find that this "married was duly solemnized and George Owen performed his covenant by a deed of feoffment d the 24th October, 1596, to "the effect that lands at the Bury, formerly the Grange of the " Castle of Newport in the occupation of various persons and "the manor house or dairy, called The Court, in the parish of Eglwysrw, with lands extending west of Pencelly Forest, by Berllan "to Pencelly

Fawr, thence by Blaen Palley Vychan to the Queen's "highway, leading from the Church of St David, at Llantood, to " Bwlch y Garreglwyd, thence by Gwaun y cyver to George Owen's " new hedge at Vroche s," were to be held for the use of Alban Owen and his spouse for life and to their sons successively in tail male, "the " Castle and Town of Newport and the Barony or Lordship of Kemes, "and the manors of Eglwysrw, Newcastle, Redwalls, Bayvill and " Moylgrove, parcel of the barony," devolving on Alban on the death of his father. The pedigree attached to the Baronia de Kemes states that Alban married in 1591 Joan, daughter of William Bradshaw of St. Dogmaels possibly Joan died early and Lettice may have been his second spouse . According to the same Post Mortem Inquisition before, among others, William Bradshaw of St. Dogmaels, esquire, the jurors present, " that George Owen was in his lifetime seised in his demesne. ' as of fee, of the Country, Barony or Lordship of Kernes, the Castleand Town of Newport, with a close called The Park, the manors of Newcastle, Bayvill, Eglwysrw, and Moylgrove, PenKelly Forest, certain lands called Henllys Ucha. Henllys Issa. and Henllys Vorganand four water grain Mills called Jordan's Mill, Newport Mill, Moylgrove Mill, and Velindre Marchog Mill, all parcel of the Barony."

Nevern Mining

Prescelly group RCAM

On the highest point of the Prescelly range 1760 ft above o.d. is a small group of Tumuli. Mounds occur over the entire length of the range and on both sides of it, some appearing to stand singly others so close together of two or three that their proximity must be intentional.

What seems to be the principle member of the group now in question was opened by Fenton in 1806. His account, which is valuable not only for his description of what he found but for the complacent story of his method of exploration, runs as follows :-

“In the autumn of that year, having had permission from Lord Milford to explore any part of the waste within his manors, for antiquities, and wishing to examine the contents of the most conspicuous barrow in the county, a day was appointed for the undertaking, and a party made up of all the beauty and fashion of the county to attend this solemn ceremony. Though I had ten miles to travel, such was my zeal for the business I was at my post on the mountain top by sunrise, with the pioneers. The morning was remarkably clear and mild, the view most charming, and everything auspicious to our plans.

We were not long at work before we discovered that under the outer greensward there was a cist of pretty large stones. We removed those in the centre, and came to a large coarse stone that covered a circular cist regularly lined round with flags, and with a flag at bottom, on which an urn was placed with its mouth downwards; but in consequence of the side flags of the cist having in the lapse of time departed from their perpendicular, the incumbent stone thereby sinking, had crushed the urn that came out in several fragments, yet leaving sufficient of it together to enable the young draughtsman, my son, to form an accurate idea of its dimensions and shape. The Pottery was very rude and ill baked, but the model elegant, and the ornaments singular and more varied than usual. In one part there was a raised line encircling it.... the urn contained a large quantity of charcoal ashes and small pieces of bone, not perfectly calcined.

I then proceeded to make sections of two smaller tumuli, but as they were composed of spongy turf and heavy whitish clay, the work was tedious and could not go on with spirit –(tour 349)”

The rifled monument is again grass grown, but the marks of the operations of 1806 are still perceptible. The cairn is built of local stones and has a base circumference of 300ft with a height of 5ft. On its summit has been a modern construction for bonfires. Examination of the disturbed places shows much White quartz stone on the surface

Foelv Eeyr

A cairn on the summit of Waun Maes at an altitude of 1530ft. It is built of mountain strewn stones, most of which could be handled by two men; White quartz stones are found in the mass. The cairn has a base circumference of about 250ft and a height of 10ft. It is evidently sepulchral and has not been much disturbed. The prospect from it is extensive, embracing the greater part of the county. – visited 9th July 1914.

Moel Feddau Cairn

A mound crowning one of the summits of Prescelly, in the south east of the parish; most certainly sepulchral. Standing at an altitude of 1520 ft above the ordnance datum. It has a base circumference of about 300 ft and an average height of 8ft. It is constructed of mountain gathered stones and is overgrown with turf. It has been interfered with –visited 19th June 1914.

Mynydd du Cairn

This is a much disturbed cairn to the west of Syfynwy brook, which here divides the parishes of Nevern and Maenclochog. Its base circumference is about 150ft and height about 3 ft. In its construction some White quartz stone appears. – visited 9th July 1914.

Pentre Ifan Cromlech

This is probably the finest example of its class in Great Britain. It stands on a field called Corlan Samson about ¾ mile south east of Pentre Ifan farmhouse. The earliest known sketch and description of any British cromlech is that furnished of this structure by George Owen (1552 – 1613) of Henllys in this parish, in his “Description of Pembrokeshire” (Owen's Pembrokeshire 1892, I, 251). In an enumeration of the natural and artificial beauties of his county, that able and energetic local antiquary remarks:-

An other thing worth the noting is the massive stone called Maen y gromlegh upon Pentre Jevan lande; yt is a huge and massie stone mounted on highe and sett on the toppes of iii other highe stones, pitched standing vpright in the grounde, yt farre passeth for biggnes and height Arthur's stone in the waye between Hereford and the Haye, or Legh yr ast neere Blaen Porth in Cardiganshire or any other that ever I sawe, saving some in Stonedge vpon Salisburie plaine called Chorea giganlum, beinge on the sheefe wonders of England; Th shones wheron this is layed are so highe that a man on horeback may well ride under it without stowpinge, the stone that is thus mounted is xviii foote Longe and nyne foote broade, and three foote thicke at the on ende, but thinner at the other, and from it, as it is apparante since his placeinge there, ios broken a peece 5 foote broad and 10 foote Longe, lyeing yett in the place more than 20 oxen would not drawe, doubtles this stone was mounted Longe tyme seethence in memory of somer notable victorie or the buryall of some notable Parson, w'ch was the ancient rite , for that it hathe pitches stones standing on against the other rounde aboute, and close to the huge stone w'ch is mounted highe to be seene afarre off They call the Stone Cromlegh”

Fenton (Tour, p560) quoting from “Ms Geo Owen” after the words “Twenty Oxen” interjects a sentence which does not appear in the above 'Description '

“There are seven stones that doe stand circle e like a form of a new moon, under the south end of the great stone, and on either syde two upright stones confronting each other”.

Edward Lhuyd, at the time when he was engaged upon his additions to Camden's Britannia had not seen this monument , as he expressly tells us (Gibson's edition col 636) and contents himself with the above account of it which he obtained at second hand from a manuscript of George Owen. The Rev John Jones (Tegid), vicar of Nevern (1842-1852) writing in 1847 says that the cromlech was formerly in a circle of rude stones 150ft in circumference ... in an adjoining field about 100 or 150 ft north east from the above cromlech, is a huge recumbent stone evidently intended for an altar; but broken in the act of being lifted or hoisted up' (Arch Camb 1847 I ii,374).

The capstone measures 16ft 9in in length is 9ft 6in broad and has at its thickest (the southern) end a debth of 2ft 8in. The stone is light in weight and appearance ; the northern end is pointed. The two highest supporters are about 7ft 6in above the soil, the third a few inches shorter. In close proximity to the shortest of the pillars, are two fine monoliths standing in line which may have formed part of a gallery or passage, of which the recumbent stone s also formed a part. The two still erect are quite unconnected with the sipport of the capstone, and formed no part of the enclosing walls of the chamber beneath it.

The circle of stones mentioned by Camden (following George Owen), and stated by Tegid to be 150ft in circumference ,is not to be traced with any certitude. The area immediately about the cromlech is strewn with large and small boulders, very many of which bear signs of recent shifting and displacement. It has been impossible to locate Jones's “huge recumbent Stone.” A difficult point to settle is whether this famous cromlech was originally hidden beneath a mound of stones or of mixed earth and stones. In such case the cairn would have been of unusual proportions, though in view of the immense mound near NewMarket in Flintshire, Avebury in Wiltshire, and the innumerable Norman mottes, it is clear that the mere size of the mound would present no insuperable difficulties. Les easy to answer is the argument – if the cromlech was intended to be covered, why it should have been constructed on such a colossal Scale? It is of course possible that the structure represents onlu a partially finished whole; and if it was intended to cover the bones of a hero, or was commemorative of one who had been slain in a tribal or racial conflict, a rapidly moving host would not have sufficient time to erect so huge a carnedd as the cromlech would require.

Pentre Van

At PENTRE Evan in this parish there is a megalithic tomb which is scheduled as a national monument as it is probably the finest example of its class in Great Britain. It is also interesting from its proximity to the Preseli Mountains, whence were taken the famous bluestones to form two of the inner circles at Stonehenge. How, or why, these stones were moved some 206 miles are matters of conjecture.

[See paper Read to the Society of Antiquities of London on 19th of April, 1923, be Mr H. H. Thomas , D.Sc., Petrologist to the Geological Surrey, and Early Britain, by Jacquetta Hawkes, published 1945 (Collins). The evidence can be studied in the museum at Salisbury.]

Cromlech Trelyffant

This cromlech stands about 500yds north west of Trelyffant farm house. The ground about it is slightly raised, being in all probability the remains of the mound which originally covered it; a few of the base stones can still be detected in the soil. The capstone measures 6ft 8in by 5ft 11in, with a thickness of 2ft 7in; it is an unshapely mass which has been forced sideways but sufficiently to dislodge it from the three pillars upon which it stands. The height above ground is 5ft 3in. When sketched by Sir J Gardner Wilkinson (Collectanea Archaeologica 1871 Vol II part iii p230) there was a small stone inserted between the square headed supporter and the capstone which has since been removed.

Adjoining the cromlech is a large stone and several small ones, suggesting the probability that this had originally been a double cromlech. The upper surfaces of both this stone and the capstone are pitted with a number of cup like depressions of varying dimensions, which appear to fall into three or four irregular groupings. In the corner of the adjoining field, about 300 yds south east of the cromlech, is an erect stone 4ft 6in high possibly a pointer to the cromlech. It is not marked on the 6in Ord. Sheet. The field upon which the cromlech stands bears the name of "Parc y llech" --visited 23 June 1914.

Trefael Burial Chamber

This Burial chamber, a Scheduled Ancient Monument, dates to the Neolithic and is thought to have been in use between 3,500 and 2,500 BCE. It is situated some 125m above AOD, and is located within a rectilinear field, some 15m from its southern boundary. The burial chamber is approximately 350m south of St Andrew the Apostle's Church. Modern aerial photographic coverage and Ordnance Survey mapping show a further stone located within or adjacent to this field boundary, directly south of the burial chamber. Historic Ordnance Survey mapping (1889-1907) depicts this stone approximately 80m further to the south-east.

A cup-marked stone, lying tilted on its side, is thought to have been the burial chamber's capstone. The stone is comprised of silicified sandstone and measures 2 x 2.3m. It appears to have been significantly damaged on one side, and a large stone flake measuring some 40cm x 35cm appears to have been sheared off. A programme of geophysical survey and excavation was undertaken in 2010 by the Welsh Rock-art Organisation, followed by further excavation in 2011 and 2012. A total of five shale beads, thought to date to the Mesolithic, have been discovered to date. 2m north of the stone the remains of a Late Neolithic Grooved Ware pot and an intact human cremation burial were found. Overlying the supposed Neolithic ground surface, immediately south-west of the capstone, the remains of a possible Bronze Age stone burial cist were found. The cist was incorporated into a shale/earth mound, thought to have originally been circular in shape. This was found to contain a vertical cut, suggesting that the stone may have been subsequently erected upright within the cut, as a standing stone. A large amount of White quartz was found to be present around the southern part of the stone, possibly representing the remains of a pavement.

Nevern – Trefael 12th February 2014

Archaeologists make fascinating discovery at north Pembrokeshire Neolithic site

An ancient monument in a field near Nevern has been giving up its secrets to a team of archaeologists from the Welsh Rock Art Organisation.

Trefael was previously classified as a standing stone, probably of early Bronze Age, until an Archaeological team, led by Dr George Nash of the University of Bristol, undertook a geophysical survey in 2009.

The results led them to believe that the stone, which is decorated with over 75 cupmarks, is a capstone once supported by a series of upright stones to form a Neolithic burial chamber, probably a Portal Dolmen, one of western Britain's earliest burial monument types.

The team continued excavating the site for another two seasons, and in 2012 cremated bone was discovered in one of the trenches that stood close to the stone. It was accompanied by later prehistoric Pottery.

The cremation and the surrounding deposits were carefully excavated and lifted by Welsh archaeologist Catarina Rees and sent for dating and analysis. The burial was also radiocarbon dated to between 2,200 and 1,900 BC.

Dr Nash said: "The cremation burial, one of only a handful within this part of western Britain to be dated using modern chronometric dating techniques, clearly shows that Trefael was more than just a standing stone. Careful Archaeological excavation over three years has shown that the site has been utilised over at least a 5,000 year period."

Llech y tribedd

Llech y tribedd, "the tripod supported or triangular shaped stone", is 1 ¼ miles north east of the Trelyffant cromlech. It is 9ft 8in long by 9ft broad with a thickness of 3ft 11 in; it stands on three supporters the whole structure having a height of 9ft 6in. The capstone is a huge unshapely block of stone. A fourth stone lies prostrate. A correspondent described to Edward Lhuyd its appearance in the year 1693:-- "It is placed on four suppiorting stones pitched in the earth about ½ yd high, one whereof is sunk a little in the earth, so that it doth not touch the covering stone; This covering stone declines towards the north occasioned by the thiskness of the south end". The ground on which the cromlech stands is perfectly flat, and ther is no trace of an outer ring of stones . The field name of Parc y llech is still in use.

A short distance off there stood, formerly, a single stone which may have been connected with the cromlech. (Fenton, Tours p 534) states that " At the west end of the field in which the cromlech stands, towards the sea, I pass a stone called Maen y tri thivedd, of the stone of the three heirs, the possessions of three different men having met there " This stone is said to be buried beneath the hedge between the field and the lane about 50yds west of the cromlech – visited 23rd June 1914.

Cromlechau Meibion Owen

About 500 yds north west of Croesffordd dwr bach are the remains of two cromlechs, of which only one is shown on the 6in Ord sheet. The first has tree supporters two erect and one fallen. The erect stones are distanced 6ft from one another, and are respectively 95 and 90 in above ground. The prostrate stone is 12ft long and somewhat pointed. Of the capstone there is no trace, and no local tradition of it appears to exist. It was unknown to the late father of Mr David Howells (aged 69), of the adjacent farm of Cilgwyn Mawr, who was born here.

To the east of this cromlech and distant fro it 30yds are the remains of the second. This one has one supporter still in situ standing 90ins above the ground; it leans slightly towards the east. Another pillar lies flat, and is now partly covered by turf; At its side is a prostrate boulder which may have been the capstone. The field is called Parc cerrig hirion. In the next field is an unfailing spring called "Ffynnon cerrig hirion" – visited 30 June 1914

Blaen Meini Stone

On a field in the north west of the parish is an erect stone now somewhat hidden under bushes. It stands 3ft 6in above the ground, has a breadth of 3ft, and a thickness of 9in. It faces north. It is not marked on the 6in Ord sheet –visited 16th July 1914

Parc lan Stones

Two erect stones on Parc lan. One which is somewhat pointed is 57 in above ground; the other is more square and rises 45in from the surface. They are not marked on the 6in Ord sheet.--visited 30th June 1914.

Ty Gwyn Stones

In the hedge opposite Ty Gwyn vottages ,on the Morfa in the north west of the parish are two erect stones now doing duty as gate posts. The taller and more southerly stands 8ft 4in above the ground; The shorter , distance 8ft to the north has a height of 6ft 3in; both are square topped. A curious local tradition asserts that these stones were dropped on their present site while being taken to build the Trelyffant cromlech. They are not marked on the 6in Od sheet.--visited 16th July 1914.

Y Garreg Hir.

An erect monolith marked “standing stone” on the 6in Ord sheet, about 600 yds south west of Trefach farm house, on the western slope of Bank du. This is a well proportioned slightly pointed stone. It stands 9ft clear of the ground, faces west, and has a girth of slightly over 11ft. To the west of this stone, and at a distance of 15yds, are 5 large stones embedded in the turf, having the appearance of belonging to a ruined cromlech. Nothing more can be said without excavation of the site – visited 2nd July 1914.

Alignment.

Outside the garden of Troed y rhiw house, half a mile south west of Carnedd meibion Owen, is an alignment of unhewn stones running due east and west for a length of 40ft. The stones number 24; they are pitched on end and have an average height of 2ft. They are set so as to touch one another. A few yads from the west end is a rudely circular group of stones, probably 12 in number, some having almost disappeared beneath the turf. The alignment and the circle are doubtless part of the same work, the object of which is not clear. The stones are not marked on the 6in Ord sheet. The site calls for excavation. visited 30th June 1914.

Waun Mawn

Of this circle on Waun Mawn, one monolith – indicated on the 6in Ord sheet by the words “standing stone” - is erect, three lie prostrate on the surface of the common, and a fourth has apparently sunk, until its pointed top is barely visible. The standing stone, which is the most northerly of the five , is 65 in above the ground. Distance 30fy in a easterly direction from this stone , is a prostrate boulder 6 ½ ft in length; a depression in the ground at its base marks its original position. The third stone 30ft further on, has been fractured either by its fall or by frost; what remains is 43 in in length. Prostrate on the line of the circle to the west of the standing stone , and distance from it 70ft is the fourth stone, a monolith of 6 ½ ft in length. A slight depression in the turf marks the spot occupied by the stone when it stood erect. The fifth stone to the south, of which only the point is visible, is probably on the circumference of the circle, and this would give the circle a diameter of 150ft. The surface of the common is much broken up by turf cutting, which has evidently obliterated traces of further stones in the circle, though it is probable that a careful examination would reveal their positions. Two hundred yds to the south west are two erect stones, and a ¼ mile to the east is a third maen hir, all probably connected with the circle. -visited 18th June 1914.

Castell Cynon

The existence of this perfect example of one of the smaller promontory fortresses in the country is known from the Tithe Commutation schedule, for although indicated on the 6in sheet, its character as a historical monument is not suggested, nor is it recognised in the neighbourhood as an antiquity. The camp is placed in the north east corner of a field known as Parc Castell immediately north of Tre Gynon farm house. The defence consists of a semi circular rampart facing west, and a steep declivity to the river Gwaun on the east, at the point where the parishes of Nevern, Llanychllwydog and Newport meet. The existing bank at its southern end is 10ft high with a fall of 20ft to a fairly well preserved ditch 3 to 4ft wide. The entrance is at the south end of the rampart, the width of the opening being about 10ft. The northern end of the bank is brought close up to the fall to the river that flows below. The adjacent field is known as Roft y Gaer – visited 2nd July 1914.

Castell Henllys

This is a fine promontory camp situated some 300yds north east of Meline Parish Church. The earthwork stands on the bank of the river Duad, which here forms the boundary between the parishes of Nevern, Meline and Eglwysrw. The east and south slopes show distinct signs of scarping to a terrace 25ft wide, which has been utilised as a roadway to an entrance on the eastern side of the camp. The tongue of land is cut off by a formidable rampart drawn in an imposing crescent across the northern and western sides of the enclosure. The enclosed area is a little over one acre; it is known as Parc Castell. The northern side of the rampart rises 15ft from the level interior and falls about 40ft to a ditch 20ft in width; both have been largely destroyed to the west. The entrance to the east has been disturbed but the clubbed end of the rampart is still to be traced – visited 8th July 1914.

Castell Trefach

The 6 in Ord surv, sheet gives no indications of the existence of this earthwork, but the name of the field recorded in the Tithe commutation Schedule led to its discovery. About 150 yds south east of Trefach farmhouse, and half a mile north east of Nevern parish Church, is a field known as parc Castell the south of which terminates in a promontory defended on three sides by precipitous descents to the Camman stream on the east and a small unnamed tributary on the west, both streams uniting at the base of the promontory. The enclosed area measures slightly less than an acre. It is defended on the north by a well preserved rampart and ditch. The bank has a length of 180ft; it rises 10ft to a fall of 20ft to a ditch 10ft wide. It is best seen at its west end. The entrance 30ft wide is at the eastern end of the bank. The top of the rampart is of unusual breadth, being of an average of 6ft. The southern slope to the river has been scarped. The field to the west is called Parc y domen – visited 23rd June 1914.

Banc Llwydlos Hut Dwellings

The site marked “Hut Circles” on that part of the Prescelly range called Banc Llwydlos is now difficult to locate. The surface has been much disturbed within recent years by mountain torrents and by stone seekers. One hut dwelling can be traced having a diameter of 8ft within the walls, but its site is much hidden beneath rank vegetation. The Pembrokeshire Archaeological Survey notes “a stone circle which could scarcely have been intended for a wall. There are ten or twelve hut circles; these appear to be really the foundations of dwelling places and not spaces marked out for sepulchres of unknown purposes”

It is quite possible that a group of genuinely prehistoric hut dwellings stood here but the site has been so disturbed that it is impossible to trace any connection, much less communication, between the chaotic heaps of half hidden stones --- visited 19th June 1914.

Waun Mawn Hut Circles

About 200 yds north of the Waun Mawn ruined circle the 6in sheet marks a “Hut Circle” This is a slight oval enclosure about 12ft in diameter . The encircling wall stands about 1ft high and appears to be formed of mountain gathered stones . It is probably a sheep enclosure –visited 18th July 1914

Castlell

On a field called Parc Castell 600yds west of Blaen Meini farm house, are faint traces of an earthwork which without excavation, it is impossible to classify. The outline gives a rectangular enclosure about 100ft by 60ft, the bank having an average height of 2ft. There is no ditch, It is probably a medieval enclosure for agricultural purposes; but the name , if it is old, presents a difficulty. In the next field to the north stands the Blaen Meini standing stone – visited 16th July 1914

Castel y garn

A field of this name 1 ¾ north west of Nevern. On the second field east of the farmstead of Parc Castell are the traces of a small circular earthwork that is so much obliterated by cultivation as to admit no more than this brief notice of it. After a fall of snow it is said that the outline is plainly discernible – visited 23rd June 1914

Houses

Trewern

The patrimonial residence of the family of Warren about 1 ½ miles south-east of the parish Church; known to older inhabitants as Tre Waryn. William Waring (or Warren) appears in the Dale Castle MSS as sheriff of his county in 1674. He was the thirteenth in his line and in all probability to him or his father should the oldest parts of the present house be credited. It is of E plan having a Hall with two wings and a central porch. The stone seated porch leads to a massive oaken door, having fine wrought iron hinges and inside bar holes. This gives access to a spacious apartment, having a panelled ceiling, now used as a kitchen. This room opens on the Hall from which broad oak stairs lead to the oak panelled bedrooms. In the coach house is a loose stone found near the house, inscribed “Built by John Warren esq., 1710”. This in all probability, refers to a vanished summer house or out building –visited 15th July 1914.

Henllys

A modern farm house occupies the site of the home of George Owen (1552 – 1613) Lord of Kemes, the first of a line of local historians as author of a History of Pembrokeshire, which has been published in the Hon. Cymmrodorion Society Record Series by Henry Owen D.C.L., another Pembrokeshire worthy.

Fenton (Tour, p 562) 1811 records George Owen description of his home :-

“chiefly of the age of King Henry VII, built of stone covered with tile, to which is belonging a stable of seven bays Long, and a barn of thirteen bays, besides all suitable outhouses, buildings, curtilages , gardens and orchards”. A fragment of walling east of the present house is stated to be a portion of the kitchen of the vanished mansion. through the wood and dingle south of the house , runs the overgrown lane by which it was approached from Pont Baldwin.

Llwyngwair

The present house is , in the main of modern date though some portion of its walls may belong to the structure erected by Sir James Bowen , an active supporter of Henry Tudor in 1485, who was living in 1517. Llwyngwair is mentioned by George Owen in his History of Pembrokeshire (1603) as one of the county residences which stood in the midst of surrounding plantations – visited 14th July 1914.

Pentre Evan

The earlier home of the Bowen family before a branch established itself at Llwyngwair. By Fenton's time (Tour p559) the mansion had become “a mere farmhouse, once the principal mansion, not only of this particular district , but of this county in the reign of HenryVII, when Sir James ap Owen, one of his strenuous adherents, occupied it in the true style of baronial magnificence”

The present house is without Archaeological interest. In the yard is a tiled building of two storeys, the remains of the stabling attached to the former dwelling. The upper floor is approached by outside stone stairs, and has numerous small openings for light.

Velindre farchog

The house known as “College” was built as a school by George Owen, who died before he could carry out his project. It bears the inscription renewed, “ Llysyd Arglwyddi Cemmes 1559-1620”. The little building has been modernised and given a new roof, ceiling, floor etc. the two windows facing the road retain their original stone mullions. As the above inscription implies, the room was also used for the court leets of the barony of Kemmes, and still continues to be so (RCAM 1923)

The Grange

On the site now occupied by the present house of this name stood the principal Grange of the Lord-ship of Kemes.

Eglwys Fair RCAM

The site of the little Chapel of St Mary is reputed to be the summit of Bane du, at the foot of which $\frac{3}{4}$ miles to the north is the present Chapel of St Mary . About 1900 the Pem Arch Survey reported upon few remains the visible. There has been quarrying in the area.

It is improbable that the building thus described was an early Chapel, for it is not likely that a religious edifice dedicated to St Mary would have been erected on such a site after the Norman intrusion. The Chapel of the Virgin was more probably on the site now occupied by the Church of Cilgwyn, where there are traditions of an earlier building than the 18th century Church which, in its turn, gave way in 1884 to the present structure, The Cilgwyn font has a square bowl, 27in each way which may be ancient Both visited 2nd and 9th July 1914

Site of Capel Cynon P265

According to George Owen (Owen's Pem 1 509) there are no fewer than eight Chapels in this parish to which pilgrimages were wont to be made. Most of them were then in ruins. Their names, as he gives them, are Capell Reall, Capell Padric, Capell St Thomas , Capell St Ffrede, Capell gwenfron, Capell wenddith, Cappell Kilgwin and Capel St George . To which of the eight belonged the faint outlines visible at Capel Cynon it seems impossible now to say. The site shows a depression 30ft in length, and 18ft in width. A few foundation stones are visible in the soil, and there is sufficient to prove that the little building lay east and west. The ruins stand on Roft y capel –visited 2nd July 1914.

Pont Baldwin (Bridge)

A bridge over the river Duad, at this point the boundary between the parishes of Nevern and Meline. Its name is commemorative of Baldwin, archbishop of Canterbury, who in the year 1188 preached the crusade at this spot, but it is not to be assumed that the bridge was then in existence. The structure has recently been widened, giving new parapets , and generally modernised. From the bed of the stream can be seen a little of the old masonry in the crown of the arch –visited 8th July 1914.

Buarth Brynach (Well)

On the slopes of Prescelly, about 600yds south of Carnedd Meibion Owen is a spring dedicated to St Brynach, and situated within Buarth Brynach. It is referred to by Fenton (Tour 355) as follows “ Above that range of rocks called Varnedd Meibion Owen, on the side of the mountain by the highway, and is compassed around with a curtilage of stone wall called Buarth Brynach – Brynach 's Fold, the wall being 6ft thick”. --No trace of a stone wall exists today –visited 30th June 1914.

Finds

Bronze Dagger

In August 1922 a Bronze dagger was found during quarrying operations at Carreg y bont quarry 50 yds west of Pont Brynberian. Its length is 10 ¼ in, maximum breadth 3in weight 1lb. The haft has disappeared, but the holes by which it was secured are to be seen. The mid rib is rounded in section and well developed. Now in the Museum of the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society.

St Brynach's Church, Nevern

St Brynach's Church, Nevern is a 15th century Anglican parish Church with a 12th century tower, much restored 1864 by R.J. Withers, architect of London. The tower is broad with a battered plinth, small two-light Bell-openings and corbelled embattled parapet. The nave has a 1864 blue lias ashlar porch. The south aisle is unusually two-storey, with a priest's chamber in the loft. There is a fine 1864 Bath stone font and pulpit. A curious cross-inscribed stone with unusual knotting is reused in south aisle window sill and there is another inscribed stone on the adjoining sill, both are in Latin and Ogham and were found in 1906 in the wall leading to priest's chamber.

Pentre Ifan Chambered Tomb, Near Nevern

Pentre Ifan is perhaps the finest surviving Neolithic tomb in Wales and forms one of a group of Portal Dolmens built around the tributaries of the Nevern valley approximately 6,000 years ago. Its chamber is formed by a capstone of around 16 tonnes upheld on three uprights about 2.5m high at one end of a cairn some 30 m long. The tomb was excavated by W F Grimes in 1936-7, who thought that it was heavily influenced by prehistoric contacts with Ireland. More recent research suggests the tomb was an indigenous creation by the local communities but may have been nonetheless influenced by Irish culture and contact during a later stage of its use, when the Long mound, long since eroded away, was extended. Finds from Pentre Ifan, as from other Welsh prehistoric tombs, were meagre, numbering a few sherds of Pottery from a shouldered bowl and a triangular flint arrowhead. Its present appearance, as a gaunt freestanding structure supporting a delicately balanced capstone, may never have been witnessed by the communities who later used it. Instead, it is thought that the whole structure was covered in a massive mound or cairn of stones with access to the chamber permitted only through the door or 'portal' at the south end.

It is a monument in the Welsh Assembly Government's guardianship and has public access.

Castell Treruffydd; Castelltreuffydd – Roman Pot Sherd ?

A sweep of degraded rampart and ditch defines a roughly tear-drop shaped enclosure, about 68m north-east to south-west by 38m, resting on steep coastal slopes on the north-west: the enclosure circuit serves to isolate a promontory below the coastal slope, as well as Careg Yspar, immediately offshore:

Newcastle Emlyn,

Newcastle Emlyn Castle.

The New Castle in Emlyn was so called to distinguish it from Cilgerran Castle, a few miles away, not the earlier motte and Bailey Castle just across the river. The rocky promontory, surrounded on three sides by the River Teifi, was fortified about 1240 by Maredudd ap Rhys Grug.

In 1287, another Welshman, Rhys ap Maredudd, escaping from the siege of Dryslwyn Castle, again evaded the English forces here and turned the tables by capturing the leader of the English garrison. An enormous effort was put into a second siege, and eventually the Castle was taken. Five years later the royal garrison deserted but local officials held the Castle until Rhys was finally defeated and killed.

Newcastle was rebuilt soon afterward, and a new town was founded outside its walls. Only parts of the Castle gatehouse still remain standing, though its plan shows that the Castle must have resembled those in better condition at Carreg Cennen and Laugharne. In the inner ward, tapering to the point of the ridge, some foundations of the Hall and Chapel can be traced. We know that in 1340 the Hall had a shingled roof and wooden gutters; 200 years later the roofs were slate, and the gutters lined with lead.

The town was half destroyed by Owain Glyndwr in 1403, and the Castle was held by the Crown in 1531 (see Carew Castle). During the Civil Wars the local Royalists retreated to the Castle and inflicted a severe defeat on their opponents. But after the general surrender in these parts, the Castle was blown up to make it untenable should fighting have broken out again.

In care of the local authority.

Newgale,

Nowadays a favourite holiday resort, with caravanners, campers and day trippers flocking in to enjoy the two miles of firm, golden sand. The massive storm-beach, made of pebbles from far and wide, is more interesting than the beach, and at times of severe winter weather remnants of the ancient submerged forest may be stripped clear of their covering of sand. This high pebble storm bank covers remains of the old village that was washed away during a storm in 1895.

New moat [Y Mot]

New moat/ Y Mot, a village and a community, extends from the southern edges of Mynydd Preseli to the Pembrokeshire-Carmarthenshire border. Historically located in the hundred of Dungledy, the village takes its name from an ancient Motte and Bailey defence of which only the artificially built mound now survives. At the centre of the village is St Nicholas's Church, mainly rebuilt in the 17th century --altar tomb.

New moat was once the seat of the Scourfield family, who are reported to have resided at the area since the reign of Edward I. L. Moore, RCAHMW, 18th September 2012

New moat lies ten miles north-east of Haverfordwest and is now little more than a village with a scattering of houses around St Nicholas Church and traces of an old motte. During the 14th century, however, this was a manor of the Bishops of St David's, who were responsible for erecting the stronghold and fostering the development of a not insignificant borough.

The remains of the motte, now no more than 12 ft in height can be seen on the east side of the main road facing Beech Court. There are no signs of any masonry, and it is unlikely that the Castle was ever built in stone. The Bailey can be detected to the west and north and was formerly mistaken for the remains of a Roman camp, being so marked on the 1907 edition of the Ordnance Survey map.

The name of New moat, however, does imply the existence of an earlier structure which has been variously identified as nearby Henrys moat or the camp of Rhyd y Brwyn. Equally this may be an allusion to The Mote which the 1907 map records south-west of the Church beyond Awel y Coed Farm. This is still partly visible and traces of the outer Bailey in the form of a shallow ditch and low outer bank cutting diagonally across the field can be seen running in a north-easterly direction towards the Church. These defences appear to have been earlier and distinct from those associated with the Episcopal borough of the 14th century, but, unfortunately, neither fortification has any recorded history.

It seems likely that the old motte gave protection to a small burgess community which was later expanded by the bishops of St David's.

Adam de Rupes foundation charter to Pill Priory c.1200 indicates that the Church was already standing, while he also granted inter alia in the township of New moat a burgage by the East Gate and one burgage on the north side. The reference to the East Gate is particularly interesting since it suggests that this early vill was defended, perhaps lying within the Bailey walls as at Dryslwyn. During the late 13th and early 14th centuries, associated with the buildings of the Bishops motte, new tenants were encouraged to take up burgages and the borough came into being. In 1291 a twice yearly Fair was granted at Michaelmas and on the feast of St Nicholas and by 1326 the burgesses total had risen to 42 holding 89 plots. They were overwhelmingly English, and they held their lands by deed which suggests that the settlement was still comparatively recent.

There is little in the appearance of modern New moat to indicate the site of this borough, but it is unlikely to have corresponded with the village before 1200 and the old motte south of the Church.

Indeed, the construction of a new stronghold only 600yds further north suggests a new location, and the indications are to the area of what is now pasture immediately across the road. There are several earth works in this area together with what appear to be house platforms, while the field boundaries run parallel to the road, but set back, which suggests the perimeter of the settlement.

Nothing is known of the later history of New moat or of the circumstances which led to its decline and virtual disappearance.

Later the Scourfield Family became prominent. They were a local family who allegedly got their riches through the result of a whippet race and had one on their coat of arms. In vault under the Church lead coffins were found and at foot of one a skeleton of a whippet.

The Church St Nicholas was already standing in c1200 according to Adam de Rupes foundation charter to Pill Priory he also granted, inter alia in the township of New moat a Burgage by the East Gate and one on the north side indicating that the early vill was defended and appears to have had walls - Bailey walls.

Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis

New Mote, or New moat, a parish, in the union of Narberth, hundred of Dungledy, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 10 miles (North East) from Haverfordwest; containing 377 inhabitants. The name is derived from an artificial mount, situated within a short distance of the Church, and entirely surrounded by a deep moat, that may be easily filled with water. It is supposed to have been originally constructed by the Flemings who, in the reign of Henry II., settled in this district of the principality, obtaining by force the hundreds of Castlemartin and Rhôs, together with a part of that of Dungledy. The parish is pleasantly situated on a branch of the river Cleddy, and comprises a considerable portion of meadow, arable, and pasture land, all inclosed and in a good state of cultivation. Its population is agricultural. The surrounding country is diversified, and displays some interesting features of mountain scenery. The ancient mansion of the Scourfields, who resided here from the reign of Edward I. till within the last eighty years, when they removed to Robeston Hall near Milford has been taken down, and the proprietor has erected a spacious and elegant mansion on a very eligible eminence, about 400 or 500 yards from the former. The house is surrounded with thriving plantations, and with groves of old trees; it is delightfully situated below the southern declivity of the Percelly range of mountains, and commands a fine view over the whole of the lower part of the county.

The living is a rectory, rated in the King's Books at £2. 4. 7.; patron, W. H. Scourfield, esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £200. The Church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an ancient and venerable structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, and one aisle, with a square embattled tower at the west end. The chancel, which appears to have been richly embellished at no very distant period, has of late been restored to its former state of elegance, and now presents a very pleasing appearance; it contains several handsome monuments to the Scourfield family, some of them of great antiquity. A Sunday school is held, in connexion with the Established Church.

very extensive Roman camp ???

Near the mount above noticed, in the lower part of the parish, and about a mile and a half south-east from the Church, are vestiges of a very extensive Roman camp, enclosing a quadrilateral area 300 yards in diameter, and situated on a gentle declivity towards the south. A considerable portion of the northern rampart has been dug up, but the remains are sufficient to mark out the four sides of the camp with tolerable accuracy. The road from Narberth to Fishguard passes through its centre.

New moat. RCAM

This monument of antiquity is described on the Ordinance map as a "Tumulus" and a fairly rectangular piece of ground on one side of it is termed a "Roman Camp" whereas the former is a good example of a Norman mound Castle and the latter represents the enclosure which accompanied the mottes of the Norman barons. The mound is now about 35ft high. There are no indications of a stone keep and it is probable that the defences consisted only of wood. The moat may originally have been dry, the present watercourse having formed (or perhaps, only deepened) by a recent owner. The Bailey is placed on the northern side of the mound, it is a fairly regular parallelogram

250ft by 120ft, and surrounded by a ditch. visited 30th September 1914

NB New moat is an excellent example of a Norman Mound Castle as well in its general lay-out as in its particular features. It is withdrawn a few yards from the village to which it gives its name and from the Church which may be contemporary with the manor of the proprietor . For or five roads radiated from it to various points of the manor. The Bailey lay nearest to the village and the residence of the Manorial Lord occupied a position of dignified seclusion.

New moat Castle

The earthworks of a motte and Bailey Castle can be seen at New moat. The motte is about 40m in diameter and 5.0m high, having a summit area 20m in diameter; a low mound, 7.0m in diameter, set at the centre of the motte summit, is thought unlikely to represent a building, or structure. The mound is ditched and counterscarped, some 54m overall diameter. OS County series (Pembroke. XVII.16 1889) depicts a water-filled moat. The motte is set astride the eastern side of a subrectangular, round-angled Bailey enclosure, about 125m NNE-SSW by up to 80m, this being defined by banks, or scarps and showing indications of a ditch, or moat. Further earthworks have been noted, some 200m to the south-west, where OS County series shows 'the Mote (site of)' whilst a linear earthwork feature is apparent on aerial photographs leading north-east from the motte ; these features may relate to the medieval borough; burgesses, but no Market, being recorded at New moat in 1326 (Kissock 1997, 132).

The Church St Nicholas was already standing in c1200 according to Adam de Rupes foundation charter to Pill Priory

RCAM The Parish Church dedicated to St Nicholas

The present structure is modern the Church having been practically rebuilt and (with the exception of the tower) recently restored on the original foundations; in addition it consists of chancel, nave and north aisle . The tower , 19ft by 16ft is 64 ft high. It has three floors , the highest lit by a two light window in each face ; the lowest storey is vaulted. An alter tomb to the memory of William Scourfield of New moat (died 1621) remains, but several handsome monuments of the same family said by Lewis to have stood in the chancel, have been removed. The font basin has been redressed and given a new base. On the floor of the aisle are three post Reformation bells, the oldest of the year 1631. in the churchyard is a plain cross shaft – visited 30th September 1914.

The Church of St. Nicholas de Nova Mota [New moat] was granted by Adam de Rupe [Roch], with the consent of his wife Blandina and his heir, to the priory of Pull or Pulla, and on the dissolution of that house came into the hands of the Crown. The patronage was afterwards acquired by the Scourfield family of New moat. In 1622 it was owned by William Scourfield - P. M. Of William Scourfield, 20 Jac. I.

Described as Ecclesia de Nova Mota, this Church was in 1291 assessed for tenths to the King, the amount payable being 8s 4d. – Taxatio.

On 7 July, 1884, a faculty was granted for the restoration of the parish Church.

There are very few institutions to this Church to be found, and in several instances it is impossible to be certain as to whether certain of the persons mentioned were rectors or vicars. It seems clear that the priors of Pulla were rectors, and presumably the King, at the dissolution of the priory of Pulla, succeeded the prior as rector. Whether the King retained the rector-ship or merely the right of presentation to the rectory is difficult to decide; the fact, however, that the King (according to the Liber Institute.) presented in 1622 Philip Bowen to the vicarage of New moat, strongly suggests that the rector ship was retained by the King, especially when it is remembered that, except in the case of prebendaries a rector in Pembrokeshire almost invariably presented to the vicarage. The date when the vicarage of New moat was merged in the rectory is unknown, but it evidently must have occurred subsequently to 1633, and presumably before 1795.

New moat The Church Plate Of Pembrokeshire. Evans, John Thomas ,

New Mote .— An Elizabethan Chalice which varies in some detail from the usual Pembrokeshire examples. It bears no Hall marks and the Paten cover has unfortunately disappeared. Height. 8 in.; diam. of bowl, 3 in.; depth (increased in repairing rim,), 4 in. The bowl is decorated with two belts, the upper of which is close to the mouth, enclosing the usual woodbine foliation but not intersecting. Within the lower is inscribed " POCVLVM ECLESIE DE NOWMOTE ". On the knop dividing the stem there are no hyphen marks. Beneath the bowl and also on the base is a band of vertical line ornamentation, and on the rim of the foot a band of egg and tongue moulding. This handsome Chalice has been badly used and as badly repaired; weight, 9 oz.

.—A Paten, 6 in. in diam., weighing 8 oz.15 dwts, ; it carries the Hall Mark of 1737 with maker's Mark RB for Richard Bayley. It is decorated with the sacred monogram, cross and nails within rays. It was given by the present Lady Scourfield in 1899 by whom it was purchased from a dealer at Felixstowe. It is said to have originally belonged to some Church near London.

—Two Salvers each resting on three feet. The larger one measures 8 in. in diam., and weighs 14 ozs. ; Hall Mark 1758; maker's Mark DB in a plain oblong stamp. Beneath is roughly scratched "New moat 1751". The smaller one bears the Hall Mark of 1749 with maker's Mark H M in a shaped stamp for Hugh Mills; diam., 6in..—A Decanter-stand of Sheffield plate, 5 in. in diameter serves the purpose of an Alms-dish. The donor of these three last mentioned pieces was Henry Scourfield, esq., who was married in 1777; to the then Bishop of Bangor's daughter. The family is now represented by his great-grandson Sir Owen Henry Philipps Scourfield, and Baronet, of Williamston, Neyland and The Mote, Haverfordwest –

Ffynnon Gain (New moat).

Now a farmstead to the south of New moat village, on a steep slope to the north of Bletherston village. In 1326 it was described as a Knights fee divisible according to Welsh tenure; it was held by Philip Brown who owned Fonnon Keyng and Castel Kymer being two carucates held of the fee of New moat. On Rees 14th century map it is marked as a Welsh knights fee.

It later passed to the Philipps family, a branch of Penty park. In 1638 John Philipps of Ffynnongain served as High Sheriff. He was inordinately attached to his money which he carried around in a red bag which earned him the nickname - Shon bwtsh Goch - (John of the red pouch). He also owned Haythog, and his son William Philipps of that place was High Sheriff in 1646. Ffynnongain was acquired by the Scourfields of New moat, and Henry Scourfield was owner in 1786. By 1873 the owner of Ffynnongain (132 acres) was W. G. Purser. Some 600 yards from the house was a holy well believed to possess healing qualities.. There are slight traces of foundations in the soil around it, but no tradition survives of any building of well house. visited 2nd October 1914

The Camp. or Castell Parc Robert

This is a small circular enclosure standing on a field known as Perc Castell about ½ mile north east of New moat village. A rampart from 2ft to 3ft high having a fall of 4ft to a shallow exterior ditch, encloses an area of about 70ft in diameter. The interior is one foot higher than the ground outside due to a rise of the Hill. The entrance, which is some 25ft feet broad is to the south west. The enclosure may have been a medieval cattle enclosure. visited 30th September 1914

Castell Cymmer or Castell Rhyd y brwyn

The confluence of two small streams at a place called Rhyd y brwyn “ the Ford of rushes” (unaccountably converted into Rhyd Brown on the Ordnance maps) forms a tributary of the river Syfynwy, and , crowning the summit of the rocky prominence which rises between the rivulets, is a fine camp which has been made by drawing strong earthen banks across the broad neck of the promontary. There are no less than four ramparts, each defended by its exterior ditch. The converging sides of the interior of the enclosure are undefended where the fall on either side to the streams is precipitous. The entrance is at the west side, a level terrace 35ft wide being left between the slope and the ends of the respective banks. That this terrace is intentional is plain from the fact that it ceases where the inner ramparts terminates immediately at the verge of the slope. A somewhat similar space is to be seen on the southern side of the entrance between the first and second ramparts. The ramparts are not clubbed nor connected with each other by loops. The enclosure is called Castle Park. visited 2nd October 1914

New Mill, New moat,

Three storey stone building under a slate roof, in a very derelict state. There is an iron overshot wheel with missing wooden buckets. The crown wheel and sack hoist are visible and other machinery may exist but the interior was not safe to enter. The mill was last used during the Second World War. The attached kiln was used for malting. Source: New Mill, brief descriptive notes compiled by Pam Moore, c.1991. B.A.Malaws, RCAHMW, 13 February 2013.

Tucking Mill, New Mill, New moat

The Tucking Mill or fulling mill stands immediately north-west of the farmhouse at New Mill; it is named 'Tucking Mill' on the 1st and 2nd editions of the 25-inch O. S. maps (1889 and 1907). It is probably of mid- to late-nineteenth century date. The rubblestone building has two storeys and a slate roof, with cambered brick heads to door and window openings. The waterwheel and all internal machinery has been removed. Cadw Listed Buildings database.

New moat Defended Enclosure

Royal Commission aerial reconnaissance on 2nd April 2013 revealed soilmarks, under cultivation, of an oval defended enclosure on the hillslope to the north-west of New moat village. The soilmarks show denuded remains of an earthwork defended enclosure, oval in shape, measuring 107m NW-SE by 82m SW-NE, enclosing 0.7ha. Soilmarks show a single enclosing bank with evidence for an external ditch, and traces of a second inner curvilinear enclosure in the style of regional concentric enclosures. The enclosure is crossed by a modern field boundary. The site lies some 520m south-west of the Parc Robert defended enclosure T. Driver, RCAHMW, 2013.

Shrunken Village, New moat

Earthworks of a shrunken medieval settlement on the Northern edge of New moat village. A linear earthwork of a house platform is visible, just North of New moat farm, running N-S for a distance of approx. 122m.

The Mote, Garden, New moat

Site of nineteenth century mansion, now ruined, with lodge, carriage drive, coach/stable yard, informal garden, parkland and large walled garden. The Scourfield family of New moat (Mote) was for several centuries one of the largest landowners in Pembrokeshire. (Possibly 18thC & 19thC the largest in the area). In the late 18th century an heiress had married Colonel Owen Philipps of Williamston. The Mote was abandoned - for various reasons it was thought more desirable to live further south. Their son, in order to inherit, changed his name to Scourfield.

A new mansion was built at Mote, completed 1830 but may never have been occupied by the family who remained at Williamston and Robeston Hall. The estate was sold in 1926 and the mansion dismantled. There remains a ruin south of the Church, at the lower end of the village of New moat, is the entrance. There is a 'visibility' display, modest gate jambs and a fairly modern gate. The lodge has been modernised and is occupied by a young family. The carriage drive immediately crosses a dam creating a fish pond to the left with a smaller (fish catching?) extension. A sluice controls the flow under the drive. The pond is fed by streams from the north. The motte has been used as a reservoir and a sluice controls the outflow.

Below ground level there is a circular stone built reservoir to the north of the mansion with metal work and metal pipes. Date? Was it fed from the motte or from the springs on the slope behind? The drive passes along the south side of the 'Pond Plantation' and curves through the 'Drive Plantation', past the stable yard to the left and the mansion to the right. There remains no trace of the drive which led to the mansion. On the north side of the drive immediately before the stable block is a substantial stone wall with a 'foot' gateway and well made jambs. The drive plantation contains mature beech, oak, ash, sycamore and laurels. There are clumps of rhododendrons identified (I Stokes) as Rh. boddaertianum. This is a Rh. arboreum hybrid probably developed from Rh. ponticum album in 1863. It has fairly long narrow leaves. The buds are pink developing into fine white trusses. On the driveway some red veined dock (Rumex sanguineus) which may be a herb garden escape. The stableblock: The north side has been demolished except for the back wall with remains of Hay feeders etc.. The south side, originally with a covered entrance, has been replaced with a stone wall and a wide gateway into the grassy court yard. The westerly stable has been converted into a modern bungalow and the easterly into a storage building. Each has a semi-circular arched niche (for statues?).

The mansion site is entered at the North west corner past existing and some ruined outbuildings against which are a fuchsia and a Clematis montana rubra. The outline of the mansion is quite clear. Some walls exceed 3m and the vaulted cellars are visible. Some mature trees close to the house include evergreen oak, to the east, and there are fairly recent plantings by the present owner who is making an informal garden of the area. Some trees appear to be about 50 years old - a turkey oak, a lime and some cherries. There is a tree/shrub whose base has fallen and rotting but with new vertical growth; thought to be a Prunus padus, the 'Bird cherry'.

At the South East corner of the site is an Abies (fir). It is dying and has a rare lichen Usnea articulatum with sausage shaped stems'. (J. Savidge).

The field in front of the mansion slopes south to a plantation. It was, it is said, referred to as 'the lawn'. Some of the trees in this 'park' survive. There is a fine Cedrus Libani to the west and a group of three oak to the south west. There is a shelter belt 'frame' to each side. Travelling eastwards along the drive: to the north is a modern conifer plantation and a retaining wall. No sign of deciduous trees and path system remain. To the south is a stone wall much damaged in parts by the trees, mostly sycamore. RCAHWW

Pillar Stone, Velindre Farm

This pillar stone, a Scheduled Ancient Monument, measures some 1.3m high by 0.4m by 0.3m. It bears a roughly pick-out linear Latin cross, with ring & dot embellishments. The stone formerly served as a gatepost. Sources include: Nash Williams 1950 'Early Christian Monuments in Wales', 193 No.344.J. Wiles 04.01.05

Newport

1839 Newport Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

Newport, a sea-port, Market-town, and parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 19½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Haverfordwest, and 242 (W. by N.) from London; containing 1751 inhabitants. The ancient British name of this place, Trêvdraeth, signifying literally "the town on the sands," appears to have been derived from its situation on a sandy beach of considerable extent, which intervenes between it and the bay of Newport. The town is indebted for its origin and early importance to the descendants of Martin de Tours, the first Lord of Kemmes, which territory he had wrested from the Welsh by conquest, and erected into a lordship marcher. William, son of Martin, built a Castle at this place, which he made the head of his barony, and endowed with many privileges. He bestowed upon the inhabitants a charter of incorporation, vesting the government of the town in a mayor and burgesses, to whom he gave an extensive grant of lands, with liberty to hold a weekly Market, and several valuable immunities; all which were confirmed, in 1192, by his son Nicholas, who granted common pasture, and water from the fosse, and whose charter declares that the burgesses "ought to have a bailiff and common council." The lordship was entirely independent of the palatinate of Pembroke: the Lord held his courts in the Castle of this place; all writs were issued in his own name exclusively, and neither in that of the Earl of Pembroke, nor even of the King of England. In 1215 the Castle was taken by Llewelyn ab Iorwerth, but it soon afterwards reverted to its original proprietors, whose descendants continued to hold it, together with the lordship, in which they exercised jura regalia, till the time of Henry VIII., when all such jurisdictions were abolished.

Under the protection of its ancient lords the town increased in extent and wealth, and enjoyed many additional privileges, some of which were granted to the barony in the 34th year of the reign of Elizabeth. It had become extremely populous, and carried on an extensive woollen manufacture, about the commencement of the sixteenth century, when a pestilential disease occasioned such mortality among its inhabitants, that its Market was transferred to Fishguard, the trade of the port ceased, and the town fell into decay. The Market has however been re-established, and some little addition to its trade has gradually taken place since that period; but the town has never recovered its former importance.

Newport stands on the high road from Cardigan to Fishguard, and is pleasantly situated at the mouth of the river Nevern, which falls into St. George's Channel at Newport bay, and on ground ascending gradually to the Carn Ingle mountain, which shelters it from the south-easterly and south-westerly winds, and rises to a considerable height beyond the town. It consists of small Streets irregularly formed, and is neither lighted nor paved, but the inhabitants are naturally well supplied with excellent water. The houses, with some few exceptions, are indifferently built, but, from the intermixture of numerous trees with the buildings, the town, at a small distance, has a pleasingly rural appearance; and the surrounding scenery, in which its venerable Church and the picturesque remains of its ancient Castle form prominent and interesting features, renders the more remote view of it strikingly beautiful.

The trade principally carried on is the working of some extensive quarries of slate, with which the neighbouring coast abounds, and of which great quantities are shipped to various places, the vessels being enabled to approach close to the quarries, and to receive the slates from the overhanging cliffs. In the burning of lime, also, for the supply of the adjacent districts, a considerable portion of the population is employed. A vein of alum shale is said to lie within a short distance of the town, but it has never been worked. There is a Salmon-fishery on the river Nevern, which in favourable seasons is carried on with advantage; and a herring-fishery also exists here, but the demand is so inconsiderable that it is not productive of much benefit to the persons engaged in it. The port is subject to the customhouse of Cardigan: the principal exports are corn and butter, and the produce of the quarries; the chief imports are coal, culm, and limestone. The harbour, which is small, has its entrance partially obstructed by a sand-bank; but it affords good shelter to the coasting-vessels occupied in the trade, and to the boats connected with the fisheries. A compact and well-protected bay, on the south and east, stretches out before the town, from which it derives its name of Newport bay. The Market is on Friday; and fairs take place on June 27th and October 16th.

Newport retains the ancient form of government which it held under the charter granted by William, son of Martin de Tours, and afterwards confirmed by his son Nicholas. The control is vested in a mayor, bailiff, and an indefinite number of aldermen and burgesses. The mayor, who acts as a sort of head constable, is appointed by the Lord of the borough from two burgesses presented by a jury; the bailiff, or pound-keeper, is chosen by the mayor; and the body of aldermen consists of those who have served the office of mayor. Courts leet and baron occur twice in the year; the petty-sessions for the hundred are held in the town on the first Friday in every month, and Newport is a polling-place in the election of a knight for the shire. The freemen, who are appointed by presentment of the jury, at one of the courts leet, are entitled to common and pasture upon the waste lands, which are about three miles in circumference. The boundaries of the borough are co-extensive with those of the parish, and are well ascertained, being duly perambulated at certain periods.

The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £16, and endowed with £400 parliamentary grant; present net income, £216, with a glebe-house; patron, Thomas Lloyd, esq., of Bronwydd, Lord of the manor. The Church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient and venerable cruciform structure, partly in the early style of English architecture, with a square tower at the west end. The roofs of the nave, chancel, and transepts, all of carved oak, are supported on ranges of plain pointed arches, and in the chancel are two stone canopies plainly wrought; over the nave is a richly wrought open spire for a Bell, and the windows exhibit tracery of considerable elegance. The building a short time since received an addition of 418 sittings, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and Chapels contributed £200, in consideration of which grant 218 of the new sittings are free. On the west side of the porch are the ruins of a detached house, said to have been the record office of the town. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Calvinistic Methodists. A school on the National system is supported here on the foundation of the late Mrs. Bevan, for the gratuitous instruction of poor children; it is a permanent establishment, and the central school in which the teachers are prepared who superintend the several circulating branch institutions connected with the foundation. The school contains about 150 males and females; and the master has a salary of £40 per annum, together with a house and garden rent-free. This plan of "circulating" instruction was originally projected by the Rev. Griffith Jones, of Llandowror, in the county of Carmarthen, in the article on which parish an account of the charity is given. A British school is supported by subscription; and four Sunday schools are held, one of which is in connexion with the Established Church. On an elevated knoll rising abruptly at the extremity of the principal street in the town, are the remains of the ancient Castle, consisting principally of one of the circular bastions that defended the grand entrance, the other having of late years fallen down, and some portions of the dungeons, between which and the town was a subterraneous communication, discovered not many years ago. The bottom of this concealed way was flagged, and the sides and the roof were secured by smooth stones. The Castle was surrounded by a moat, and though the ruins bespeak it to have been originally occupied as a seat of baronial magnificence rather than as a fortress, it was no doubt well adapted to both purposes, and in its general construction it appears to have combined strength with elegance. Newport bay, bounded by the headlands of Dinas and Ceibwr, opens beautifully in front, rendering the situation peculiarly delightful. Beyond the site of the Castle rises the lofty rocky eminence of Carn Ingle, where St. Brynach, to whom many churches in Wales are dedicated, is said to have passed his life in religious seclusion, and to have conversed with angels, from which fabulous tradition the place has been termed also "Mons Angelorum." There are Druidical remains in the vicinity: about half a mile from Newport, in a field on the Fishguard road, and near a bridge, are some very curious antiquities of this kind, consisting of a small chamber formed of massive stones; and close to the town, in a field on the road leading to Berry Hill, about 200 yards from the Nevern river, is a very fine cromlech. On a Hill connected with Carn Ingle is a large stone, named Morris' Grave. According to Speed there was anciently a house of Augustine friars at this place, but no particulars of its foundation or history have been preserved

1895 Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire Timmins

Nestling beneath the Castle, on the outskirts of the town, stands the handsome parish Church of St. Byrnach. The original edifice is said to have been erected by the builder of Newport Castle, but the present Decorated structure has superseded a building of later date that was the very epitome of ugliness. Within the Church stands a very early font, probably the original one of Norman times. Of the finely wrought and gilded rood-screen it is said once to have possessed, not a vestige has been preserved.

St. Byrnach, the patron'saint of Newport Church, was an Irishman by birth, and a contemporary of St David. He appears to have been held in high esteem Throughout all this district, where many of the parish churches are dedicated to his name. This holy man is supposed to have led the life of a hermit, dividing his time between Buarth Byrnach, or Byrnach's Fold, on the singular mountain called Carnedd Meibion Owen, and the rocky recesses of Carn Englyn, the Angel's Peak, above Newport town, a Hill that derives its name from a tradition that St. Byrnach was nourished by angels during his lonely sojourn there.

Newport was anciently a borough town, having obtained its charter of incorporation as early as a.d. 1215. The town also received the grant of a Market from Sir Nicholas FitzMartin, Lord of Kemaes, in the year 1278. This ancient document is still extant. Henceforth Newport continued to grow and prosper, and in the sixteenth century carried on extensive woollen manufactures. Upon the outbreak of the 'sweating sickness,' the place suffered severely ; its Market was discontinued, and many of the inhabitants fled to the more salubrious air of Fishguard.

Though its privileges have been much curtailed in modern times, the town has still nominally a municipal body, though the latter has neither revenues to dispose of, nor functions to perform. Of recent years, however, Newport has shown signs of re-awakening prosperity; and when the long-talked-of railway line becomes a fait accompli, this pleasant little Market town will doubtless enter upon a new lease of life and activity.

At Parrog, where the Nevern stream embouches upon Newport Bay, we find a watering-place in its infancy. Parrog is an attractive spot in a quiet sort of way, and draws a Fair sprinkling of holiday-makers from up the country during the long days of summer. A few comfortable if unpretentious lodging-houses offer decent accommodation, and cater in a manner that leaves little to be desired where criticism is disarmed by lusty appetites, bred of long hours spent in the brine-laden air. The neighbourhood, too, is pleasantly diversified, and contains many secluded nooks affording charming rural rambles.

But to return to Newport. At the farther end of the town, after passing the Llwyngwair Arms, we turn down a lane in the direction of the river, and in a couple of hundred paces descry a cromlech standing amidst an adjacent meadow. Though smaller than many others in the county, this cromlech is in a good state of preservation, and, possesses an uncommonly massive capstone.

Lies on Fishguard to Cardigan road where the River Nevern flows into Cardigan Bay.

Once the chief centre of the barony of Cemais, this is a Norman town in the heart of the Welshry with a Norman Castle (much modified and now used as a private residence), the Church (with a solid Norman tower) and the old mills which used to depend upon water power. The town dates from the late 12th century and the regularity of its street-pattern confirms the documentary evidence that this was a planned borough created within the lordship of Cemaes.

It is not known if this new borough displaced an existing Welsh vill as was sometimes the case. The traditional Welsh name for Newport is Tref-draeth, which denotes a settlement on the sand, and it has been suggested that an earlier settlement existed by the shore at Parrog which has since been lost through sand encroachment.

The Normans had originally chosen nearby Nevern as this district's caput, but the Castle there was destroyed by the Welsh in 1191. William de Tours elected to build its successor on a new site half a mile inland, and within two years it was completed.

1215 The town was given a charter before 1215 by William de Tours who built the Anglo Norman borough and ancient traditions are still preserved. This charter was confirmed by his son Nicholas and gave the burgesses the right to appoint a Mayor in consultation with the Lady or Lord Marcher, an unique privilege which continues to this day.

The Court Leet meets regularly, and the Mayor has to perform various duties during the year. One of these is to ensure that the parish boundaries are in order, and the annual Beating of the Bounds ceremony takes place during August.

The Newport area is well blessed with prehistoric monuments and remains. Iron age camps, Flint working sites the remains of a drowned forest of 5000 BC and the cromlech called Carreg Coetan which is located in the town, incongruously fenced off at the edge of a small housing estate.

Parrog is a part of Newport tourist industry which is now of great importance to Newport, and the town is able to capitalise on its wonderful scenic resources - river estuary, Traeth Mawr (the finest sandy beach on the North Pembrokeshire coast), sand dunes, magnificent sea cliffs, wooded valleys, and the rocky eminence of Carningli as a backdrop.

Newport, ranked among the largest of the medieval Welsh towns functioning as the head of the Independent lordships of Cemaes. The lords exercised jura regalia rights within their own territory and their own gaol and gallows were located just beyond the town near Cnwcau Farm on the Penfeidr road.

Charter Of The Town Of Newport, A.D. 1215.

"LET THOSE, present and to come, know that I, Nicholas, son of William son of Martin, Lord of Kemes, have given and granted, and by this my charter have confirmed to my burgesses of Newburgh all the Liberties and Customs underwritten, which William son of Martin, my Father, to the same did grant and give, that is to say-That they shall have Common of Pasture in my Land and Common, in the Water from the Fosse which encloses the Town Eastwards to the Sea, and Easement of Wood for their Houses and Buildings, and for Firing, by view of the Forester.

Likewise, if a Burgess dies of what death soever, unless by Judgment for Felony he should lose his life, I will have nothing of his Chattels, but his relief, to wit, Twelve Pence. Likewise if a Burgess delivers up any of his Cattle (in charge) to any one, and the same is judged guilty of Felony or Robbery, or shall lose his Cattle, the Burgess, by good and lawful men may prove his Cattle, and have them. Likewise, if a Burgess hath hired Land of any Free Man, and that Free man infringe the compact, I ought to cause him to hold to the Agreement; in the same manner I ought to compel the debtors of burgesses of whom they hold bail and Witnesses, and make them render their Debts. Likewise, a Burgess accused of any Forfeiture may be repledged by his Neighbours. Likewise, they ought to have a Bailiff and a Common Council for me and them.

Likewise, no Foreign Merchant may buy or sell outside of my borough of Newburgh. Likewise, a Burgess accused of Felony, or Robbery, if he calls on me, I am to defend him, and take upon me to enable him to make a good defence. Likewise, the burgesses shall not be bound to go in the Army, except as the burgesses of Pembroke do. Likewise, with the aforesaid Liberties, I have granted to them all the Liberties and good Customs of Pembroke, all which said Liberties I have granted and confirmed to them and their Heirs to be holden and had of me, and of my Heirs, freely and entirely and peaceably; and that this my Donation and Grant and Confirmation may be firm and steadfast for ever, to this charter and Confirmation I have put my Seal. These being Witnesses-John de Arundel; Jordan de Cantiton; Robert ap Owen; William ap Gwn,;ared, then Constable; David ap Owen; Henry Gait; William ap Howe!ab Evan Meredith, Clerk; and many others."-(Baronia de Kemeys,)

Burgages and the town

1324 A borough rental of 1324 realised 46s., which, if the burgages were let at the standard 1s. each, meant only 46 plots but there are reasons for assuming that this was a serious undervaluation as one hundred years later an extent of 1434-8 gives a detailed list of the burgesses and their holdings and what street the plots were on. There were a total of 223 plots, 20 of the south side of west Street beginning near the stream called Warentrelak and running east towards the Castle; 20 off Bridge Street; 24 along Goat Street; and 11 along Vicus Mabudrud, Long Street 88, and St Mary St 59.

1275 The lords mill, mentioned in 1275, stands along the Afon Felin immediately below the Castle, while on the east side St. Mary's churchyard was originally much smaller and burgages lined its northern edge. Adjoining was the old vicarage, known locally as The Court, which remained until 1800 although some vestiges were still visible 30 years later when Lewis visited the town. North-west of the Church at the junction of Church Street and Bridge Street stood the small Market-place, while immediately north on the west side of Long Street was the town Hall although the building had ceased to be used for administrative purposes by the late 16th century. Finally, at the end of west Street, near Warren tree Lake was an area set aside for use by the town Potters. Two kilns dating from the late 14th and early 15th centuries were discovered here in 1921 by workmen laying the foundations of the Memorial Hall.

1594 All but 50 of the 233 burgages recorded in 1434 had fallen into decay and stood untenanted, even the towns weekly Market had ceased to be held. The reasons behind this sudden decline are unclear, and the evidence conflicts with the traditional view of 16th-century Newport as the centre of an important woollen industry with its port. The development of Fishguard during this period is said to have resulted from the migration of many Newport inhabitants fleeing from plague, and although the story has been described as a myth there may well be much truth in it, particularly since another outbreak recorded in 1665 (see plague at Haverfordwest and Dale and the bodies found at the building of the Cleddau Bridge) was sufficiently severe to cause the removal of the revived Market to a village four miles away, where it was still being held in 1714.

RCAM –Newport Castle

Newport Castle

In the year 1195, following upon the foundation of the New Port in place of Castell Nanhyfer as the seat of the Norman lords of Cemes, a stone Castle was built within the newly founded borough by William grandson of Martin de Turribus, the founder of the Marcher Lordship of Kemes of which Nanhyfer (NeVERN) Castle had hitherto been the caput. In 1324 the Castle and Lordship passed through an heiress to the baronial family of Audley, remaining in that family until the reign of Henry VIII. The barony of Kemes next passed into the family of Owen of Henllys until another heiress conveyed it to the Lloyd s of Bronwydd. The present owner Sir Marteine Lloyd bart., exercises the original Lord marcher privilege of nominating the mayor of Newport each year.

The Castle which stands on a circular mound, is surrounded for two thirds of its extent by a wet moat; the continuation of the moat is through higher ground, and is always dry. The dominate features of the original Castle that still remain are the gateway and its flanking tower. From a square base the tower takes a circular form and rises to a polygonal story of a later date

At the north east angle of the Bailey is a circular tower of two storeys containing a fine chamber known as the Hunters Hall in which are traces of an early English fireplace. The wall between the gateway and the tower is much ruined. This curtain is continued on both the east and west sides of the mound ceasing at the point where the wet moat commences. The eastern curtain terminates in a circular tower springing from a square base, but presenting a flat side to the court. It contained a wardrobe, and two large recesses, the object of which is not apparent. Adjacent to this tower on the north is a vaulted under Croft of the early Decorated period, having a central pier 4ft high from which eight ribs radiate to the Angles and sides of the chamber. It has two single lights splayed from 1 ¼ ft to 4 ½ ft. When this crypt was cleared out in 1858, two interesting 15th century vessels came to light. In the south west angle is the still perfect underground room called dungeon, with its curious herring bone ashlar lining. The cell measures 9ft by 6ft; it has a manhole in its vault, and a door 3 1/2ft above the floor level. This is without doubt alluded in the entry "the Lord has a goale for felons in his Castle at Newport and all felons taken in [the Lord-ship of]Kemes were to be brought there " (Baronia de Kemeys p21). Just north of the goal are vestiges of what would seem to have been a large oven. In 1859 the present residence was erected on the site of the great gateway, since which date the ruins have been admirably cared for and preserved – visited 14th July 1914.

About thirty years ago the late Sir Thomas Lloyd restored Newport Castle, which was then a mere shell ; the principal remains consisted of a great gateway with its western flanking tower. A Long chamber could be traced within, known as " The Hunter's Hall." Here were the scanty remains of a fireplace with relics of an Early English moulding. A wet moat defended the Castle; this was supplied by two streams. – Edward Laws

Newport Castle - Tony Roberts 1989.

The first Norman invader in north Pembrokeshire was Robert Martin, who, not content with his estates in Somerset and Devon, was greedy for land in Wales. Landing first at Fishguard near the mouth of the Gwaun valley, he later moved to Nevern and became the first Marcher Lord of Kemes.

His grandson William married the daughter of the Lord Rhys who in 1191 ejected him from Nevern.

William then built a Castle at a new place, Trefdraeth (Newport) along with a town and Church. Proximity to the sea, better than at Nevern, was probably a strong point in favour of the site.

The Marcher Lordship of Kemes passed to the Audleys, but twice in the 13th century the Castle at Newport was destroyed by the Welsh. The present Castle was probably built after these destructions.

In 1543 the lordship was bought by a prosperous Welsh lawyer, the father of George Owen of Henllys, famous for his Description of Pembrokeshire. The Owens wanted the lordship rather than the Castle, which was described as an utter ruin in mid 16c, but eventually the Castle was restored and a residence made from the gatehouse by the Lloyd's of Bronwydd in 1859.

The Castle consists of a massive gatehouse flanked by two circular towers, the dungeon tower on the southwest and the Hunters tower on the northwest. The relatively vulnerable southeast side was protected by a large D-shaped tower. Adjoining this are the remains of part of the Chapel and a vaulted crypt. A vaulted dungeon remains in the aforementioned southwest tower. The Castle is privately owned and some restoration work is being done, after which there will be some access for the public. Part of the Castle can still be viewed from across the road. The Castle is in private ownership and viewing is from the surrounding area only.

Church St Mary's.

1810 R. Fenton Pembrokeshire edition 1903 p 299.

The Church is cruciform in building, consisting of a nave, chancel and cross aisles, roofed in old oak. The nave is separated from the chancel and the aisles by plain pointed arches. There was a rood-loft in the memory of some old people handsomely wrought and gilt. It has been said there was an Organ, but that I doubt.

St Mary's Church

In the years 1834-5 the Church was enlarged and a gallery built. In 1859 Arch Camb. found the Church had undergone so many alterations that little then remained of the original edifice. It was again restored in 1878 when the only portions then retained were the tower, font, holy water stoup and rood-loft stairs at the left hand side of the chancel arch.

The Church consists of Chancel nave, north and south transepts and western tower. The tower is of three storeys, with corbel table and parapet. At the north and south angles are stepped buttresses, that to the north having a small niche with ogee head, and on the stop above, a corbel showing a man's face. The west doorway has a pointed arch, and on either jamb a shield of heater shape charged with a chevron. The west window above the doorway is modern. Above the window, and at too great a height for decipherment are two escutcheons which Fenton says bore party per pale, a chevron; and on the north side are two defaced shields. The stairs are in the south east angle; they are carried slightly above the parapet. The font of the cushion type, is one of the finest in the county, retaining its original bowl, moulded shaft and base. The bowl, externally 25 ½ inches and internally 18 ½ inches square is lead lined; it shows traces of a hinged cover, and its exposed faces have been coloured red and black. The total height is 35 inches. In the south wall of the tower and adjacent to the font is a stoup, the projecting circular bowl terminating in a trefoiled head. A projecting corbel in the north wall of the nave bears a male face; this may not be in its original position.

The fragments of a 14th century coffin slab found in the churchyard have been collected and placed in the base of the tower. The stone measures 71 ½ in by 26 ½ in at head and 17 ½ in at foot; it bears in relief a male face, much damaged, and a floriated cross. The inscription reads: CES; ANE; GIT; ICI; DEV; DEL; ALME; EIT; MERCIE

In the vestry is the discarded communion table of late 17th century date, 60in by 28 ½ in by 33 in with a carved frieze and legs of conventional pattern ----visited 10th July 1914.

Churchyard enlarged 1886.

The west tower is 16c. The chancel and nave have old masonry but no old features, although the nave is flanked by two bay Chapels (or aisle transepts). There are fragments of a 14c cross slab. The communion table is 17C. There is a Norman Font and in the Churchyard a stone with a ring cross on in suggested to be from the 7C.

There is a resident Clergyman. It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 6d to 8d a day with food and 1s a day on their own finding. It also includes number of seamen There is no resident land proprietor. Many of the population cannot Read or write.

Mrs Bevans Central School The model School for Masters of Mrs Bevans circulating schools is practically the parish school of Newport. The trustees pay £40 per annum to a permanent master there and find him a house and garden. I called on this master on the 5th February . The school was not in operation having been closed during some months for repairs. Up to the time of my visit, this model school had been furnished with neither maps, cards, prints, blackboard, enclosure, or privies. It did not appear that any permanent school registers were in existence, The master had , he said, at one time kept them, but not finding them called for, had discontinued them. It is almost superfluous to add that such an institution is most inadequate as the nucleus of a charity so richly endowed as Mrs Bevans David Lewis Assistant

British School On the 28th of January I visited the above school. It was held in a room over a cottage belonging to the Independent Chapel. The school room was furnished with desks and benches on the British and Foreign plan and well lighted, but rather low. The furniture was in good repair. I heard a class Read out of the Scripture Lesson Book. They were nine in number. Five Read with tolerable ease. They possessed a very competent knowledge of the patriarchal history. Some few questions on the rudiments of grammar were very Readily answered by four of them. Arithmetic they were not so well versed in. The master was an intelligent person and spoke English correctly. His scholars answered partly in English and partly in Welsh. David Lewis Assistant

John Evan's School On the 28th of January I visited the above school. It was kept by and old man (who told me that he had formerly been a master mariner) in a wretched cottage. The room was very badly lighted, and still worse ventilated. The floor was uneven. The only school furniture was two or three planks laid across benches, and two rotten old tables. There was a bed in the room. David Lewis Assistant

Independent Sunday School On the 24th of January I visited the above school, which was held, morning and evening, on alternate Sundays. I learned from one of the teachers, that on each Sabbath previously to the commencement of the school there was a teachers meeting held to take into consideration what chapter will be Read on the following Sunday. On the day of my visit the chapter Read was the 3rd of St Matthews Gospel. I visited most of the classes in the school, and found no further instruction given than putting each clause of each verse verbatim into the form of an interrogation. The instruction was altogether in Welsh. Most of the classes could Read with tolerable ease. David Lewis assistant

A small Market town, sea-port and parish, in the hundred of Kemiss. The trade of Newport was at one time more considerable than now. The importations comprise timber, limestone, coal and culm; and its exports, corn, butter slates. In some seasons the Salmon and herring fisheries are profitable; and the bay forms an excellent harbour of refuge from the easterly and southerly winds.

The parish Church of Saint Mary stands in the upper part of the town, and is a handsome and commodious edifice, in form crucifix; the living is a rectory, in the gift of the Bronwydd family. There are places of worship for dissenters, and a charity school. Several romantically situated seats ornament the neighbourhood of Newport; and the scenery, from many points, is pleasing and picturesque. The parish contained, in 1831, 1,798 inhabitants; but by the last census (1841), it appears the number was only 1,751.

Parrog.

Was once a thriving fishing and sea trading community but the estuary has now silted up. The remains of old warehouses as still there one converted into a sailing club house and there are many fine old houses showing that it was once a prosperous community many of them belonged to retired sea captains.

Old stepping stones used by the pilgrims on their way to St David's still visible in the river by the bridge at low tide [but be very careful trying to cross using them - I tried and slipped off one and fell in the river causing much amusement]

Sites of Interest.

Carningli Common. Undefined Settlement. 1 mile south of Newport -

The Hill slope around the Hill fort of Mynydd Carningli is covered with the remains of undefended settlements which comprise hut circles and associated field systems. These monuments are difficult to date in the absence of excavation and may range in date from the bronze age to the post Roman period.

Carn Briw

This Cairn formed of small boulders, is placed on Carn Ingli Common at an altitude of 1089 ft above sea level. It has a height of 8ft and a base circumference of 300ft commanding a wide prospect in all directions. It has not been injured by man, but has been slightly disturbed by animals –visited 29th July 1915.

Carreg Coitan Arthur

A well preserved cromlech standing about 300 yds north west of the town of Newport, on the left hand side of the road leading to the bridge over the river NeVERN. The capstone which is somewhat ungainly in form is supported by only two of the original pillars. In length it is 10ft 7in, in breadth 8ft 11in and in thickness from 3 to 3 ½ ft. the chamber is about 5 ½ ft by 4 ½ ft. the supports vary in height from 3 to 4ft. Closely adjoining the structure are four other stones partially buried in the soil, and faint traces are visible of the base of a cairn. The cromlech is locally known as the “Quoit Stone” and “Arthur's Stone”-- visited 7th July 1914. Arch Camb 1872 p140

Ffynhonnau Stones

In the north west corner of a little common immediately south of Ffynhonnau house is a heap of mountain strewn boulder stones, which have the appearance of being the contents of a ruined cairn – visited 2nd July 1914

Cerrig y Gov

Distance about a mile and a quarter from Newport in a field on the right hand side of the Fishguard road are the remains of what must have been, when in a perfect state, one of the most interesting monuments in the county. It consisted of five stone cists, the group forming a circle that was, and still is, raised slightly above the surrounding field. Its existence has always been known, but in Fenton's Time it was “overgrown with weeds and briars” so that no description of its special features was possible. In 1920 the undergrowth having been carefully removed the real character of the structure became clear. Fenton (Tour p 555) removed the covering stones of the cists, and digging down about a foot through fine mould, came to charcoal, and soon after pieces of urns of the rudest Pottery, some particles of bones, and a quantity of black sea pebbles. He adds: “I opened them all, and with very trifling variation of their contents found them of the same character. In the vacant space between each cistvaen, as well as in the centre over which the cromlech had been raised I likewise dug but found nothing indicative of sepulture ... The largest lid stone was 13ft 3 in in length, nor were the others much less and the whole group was in circumference 42 yds”.

Bedd Morus (or Maurice)

According to Lewis, Top Dict 1833 “There is on a Hill connected with Carn Ingi, a large stone, called Morris's Grave” A description in Arch Camb 1875 p305 reads “Judging from its form it was probably a portion of a cromlech. Its height also (7ft 6in) is one usually found in chambers of moderate dimensions. There are a few stones near it, but not apparently connected with it, as the land around is full of such stones. It is known as Bedd Morris which Morris or Morus, was a notorious robber, who lived among the rocks on the summit of the Hill commanding the pass; and which is the old, and was once the only, road to Newport.... the stone may be one of the groups that existed on the same line of road, the most remarkable part of which is the Long line of upright stones called 'Parc y Marw’”.

Y Garreg hir

Y Garreg hir

An erect stone standing at the meeting point of three fields known as Parc garreg hir one mile west of Newport. It has a somewhat rounded top, is 41 in above the soil, and faces south. Tradition is silent about it –visited 21st July 1914

Cross inscribed Stone

In a field close to College Square, south of Nevern Church, is an erect stone, which is not marked on the 6in sheet, and which is said to have been disinterred some years since from ground close by. It is an undressed boulder of Prescelly diabase, standing 58 in above ground with a breadth of 38 in. On it is inscribed a cross within a circle, of extremely rude workmanship. The circle has a diameter of 28 in, the arms of the cross are of equal length, but do not quite join the circle. A small stud is placed in each of the quadrants formed by the cross arms –visited 3rd July 1914

Cross Incised Stone

On the 12th March 1924, following upon communication from the Director of the National Museum of Wales (Dr R.E.Mortimer Wheeler, F.S.A.), a cross bearing stone was discovered serving as a gatepost to the enclosure shown as Cnwe y Crogwydd, “gallows hillock”. The cross is of the ordinary simple type; equal armed, within a rudely formed and somewhat smaller sized circle than usual. The arms are extended slightly beyond the bounds of the circle; the vertical arm to a greater extent than the others, and is terminated by a small dot. About an inch lower than this terminal, and apparently sheltering it, is a curved bar. There is no inscription or Ogam Markings. The stone should be carefully removed to a place of safety.

Carn Ingli

This is one of the best preserved of the pre historical camps of Britain.

The following article is by Lieut Col W LI Morgan R.E. F.S.A. :-

Carn Ingli is situated at the top of a high mountain, about 1 ½ miles north of Newport.

The defences consist of a series of stone walls connecting tors, some of which are of considerable size. The walls in places are still perfect, though generally they have fallen forward. Owing to the immense quantity of loose stone lying about in all directions, it is evident that the walls have never been robbed for the sake of stone; and further that the builders being in no way restricted in these materials. The walls were limited to their very moderate dimensions for some practical reason. In several places where they are intact the width of rough walling is about 3 ft, backed with rough stones, according to the slope of the Hill. The free use of headers shows that the constructors were no novices in the art of building. They appear to have considerable difficulties with their foundations, and, consequently, every advantage was taken of masses of rock projecting above the surface of the ground for the foundation of the wall.

The height of the wall at present in no case appears to exceed 4ft but the foot is generally buried in masses of fallen stone – 2ft to 3ft at the least. The height probably never exceeded 6ft to 7ft. In the case where the walls are on fairly level ground, and have now fallen into a shapeless mass of ruins, the stones which have never been reduced in number by either time of man, would if collected together, represent a wall 6ft high and 6ft wide. It is remarkable that with the abundance of building materials the walls were not made higher. It is hardly likely to enable the defenders of one line to retreat to the next, for in those days the retreat from the first line to the second would have been made as difficult as possible; there the defenders would have to stay or die. There for some reason the height of the ramp was limited to 6ft or eight ft at the most. The only reason I can assign is that it was restricted to this height to enable the defenders, at a favourable moment to jump down and finish the fight at close quarters, which they would be unable to do in the case of a high rampart.

The Great Tor of Carn Ingli divides the main camp into two. The north east portion is defended on the west by the scarps of the tor, and on the south by a wall connecting this tor to another on the east, above a steep and rocky slope. A wall running east and west connects this last tor with the main tor, forming the northern side of this north east portion. This wall is well preserved and is in places 4ft high by 3ft wide, but it is probably higher owing to the accumulation of stones at its base. It seems to have been platformed at the top, and was, consequently never higher than it is now. Projecting masses of rock have been largely utilised in the foundation of this wall.

The north east outwork – From the junction of the north wall with the main to another wall runs north east 300 ft to a small tor. This wall is in a ruinous condition, but it is evident that no stone have been removed from it. It is now continued 100ft to another small tor. This portion is better preserved ; it is broken by an entrance, but it is very doubtful whether this is original; at all events it has been so altered that only the site remains. The wall curves round the northern extremity, and turning southward forms the eastern side of the outwork. It afterwards divided into two, the commencement of another outwork. Both are thrown upon what has been called the eastern tor; one is 120ft below the other. In places they are well preserved, and the space between them both, on the upper and lower slopes, is covered with masses of loose rock rendering approach very difficult. The interior and exterior of this outwork are covered with hut circles, and ponds of various sizes, more particular on the eastern and western slopes, and even between the two outworks, among the masses of stones are to be seen traces of huts.

The western portion of the main camp is protected on the east by the Great Tor; a short wall connects this with a smaller tor, and together they form the southern defence. A wall with an entrance now much damaged, continued northwards about 120 ft, forms the western defence. The northern consists of a wall joining the western wall with the main tor. it can be fairly well traced among a mass of stones which render any defence almost unnecessary. A further outwork towards the west containing the best preserved entrance is defended by a wall on the southern and northern sides overhanging considerable slopes, and on the west by a wall better defined than in most places. A further outwork extends to the tor on the western point. The wall, more especially on the southern side is mostly composed of portions connected together by projecting rocks, but beyond the tor it disappears in large masses of broken stones, very difficult of access. Some distance down is an outer wall in continuation of the wall of the lower western outwork, and joining the eastern and western tors. The whole slope between the ridge and this outer wall, and for some distance outside is covered in hut circles and ponds , as also to a lesser extent, the northern slope; the only part where they are absent is on the western approach, and here the ground is so strewn with detached stones placed in such a manner as almost to suggest that the hand of man had something to do with their distribution. There are no circles in the main camp or western outworks.

Carn Ingli, when it is better known will be recognised as a typical example of the men of the early iron age in Wales. The low rampart connecting small tors with the fighting platform above is most characteristic of those times. The numerous outworks, with the multiple of hut circles and ponds is unequalled anywhere in Wales, and these features have been preserved in a marvellous manner by the vast accumulations of stones upon which they are built, the result of the disintegration of the trap rock. --visited 12th Aug 1915 – Arch Camb 1905 p162.

Carn Ffoi Camp

The following article is by Lieut W. Ll Morgan R.E. F.S.A.

A little stone wall camp on the western spur of Carn Ingli mountain about 1 ¼ miles distant. The walls have crumbled into a mass of ruins, and have mostly fallen forward down the slope of the Hill, and have been further destroyed by farmers. The defences consist of a single line of wall connecting projecting tors. To the east the ground on the outside almost commands the interior of the camp. Here the wall is straight and most massive. There are no traces of a ditch, which never existed. A few hut circles along the line of the wall are still to be seen. The two entrances are probably original but have been altered out of all recognition. The geological formation is trap, and stones are abundant on the whole mountain, but they are more numerous here and at Carn Ingli – visited 18th July 1915.

Intrenchment

A crescent shaped intrenchment stands on the south bank of the river NeVERN near its mouth, and but a few feet above high water level. It has a length of 180ft and a height of about 10 ft with a fall to a ditch 10ft wide. --visited 3rd July 1914.

Bedd Samson

About 500 yds east of the earthwork at the mouth of the river Nevern and close to the spring marked Ffynnon Care on the Ord. Sheet, is a mound known locally as Beed Samson which is not shown in the 6in sheet. Its length is 35ft and breadth 12 ft, and it has a south east north west axis; the south eastern end has been disturbed. The average height is about 5ft. It stands on the south bank of the river Nevern, on a spot liable to floods, and covered at spring tides. Its form is that of a long barrow, and its name suggests a burial; but it was probably designed to serve as a fighting platform to the earth work. It is analogous in size and location and appearance to the mound near the mouth of the Loughor –visited 2nd February 1921.

Circular Hut Dwellings

About half a mile south west of Carn Ingli and just above the 1000ft contour line, are two or three groups of hut circles or village sites, enclosed within walls of rough dry masonry. The largest and most perfect of the groups is north of a natural prominence called Cern Edward. It has an area 55ft in diameter; the encircling wall is built of small stones without mortar, of a height of nearly 2ft with an average breadth of one ft. there are two entrances one to the north west, and the other to south east; both have a width of 5ft and are fairly undisturbed. The hut circles in the area have diameters varying from 6 to 10ft. A second enclosure, a little to the north north west of the first is of a similar type, but with a diameter of only 20ft and apparently with only one entrance to the south. There may have been a third enclosure adjoining these two, but the disturbed state of the ground renders it difficult to be certain. It seems to have been similar in size and arrangement to those already described. Not far off is a small pool. The walling is altogether too slight for prehistoric structures, and the circles are probably medieval sheep folds –visited 29th July 1915.

Carnewn Well

Carnewn is the rocky prominence at the foot of Carn Ingli, on the right of the road leading from Newport to Cilgwyn. The well is exactly south of the “Rising Sun” inn. It is placed in a cleft of overhanging rock. The spring is still frequented, its water is, which is said to rise and fall with the tide, being regarded as a cure for warts; a pin is thrown into the well for each wart –visited 3rd July 1914.

Medieval Pottery Kilns

In January 1921, workmen employed in preparing the foundations for a public Hall in west St uncovered the bases of two 15th century Pottery kilns, which were seen by our Inspecting Officer a few years after the discovery had been made. The structures were surrounded by a quantity of sherds of pitchers, bowls, ridge and floor tiles and baked clay. The base diameter of the kilns was 5ft 8in; round each of them ran a flue 2ft 6in wide connecting with the arch of the firehole. One of the kilns was cut through; the second is in excellent preservation. Specimens of the ware and tiles are exhibited at the National Museum of Wales Cardiff and the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society Museum at Carmarthen. The earthenware pitcher and two handled pot which are preserved in the latter museum were evidently made in these kilns. Both retain traces of their original yellow Green glaze.

Newton North,

Education in Wales (The Blue Book) 1847 Newton North

Mr George Protheroe, farmer of this parish, informed me that there are only three farms and five of six cottages in the parish altogether. There is no day or Sunday school of any description in the parish, and very few children requiring education. The farmers send their children to one of the adjoining towns to school and the labourers children are without any kind of education. There is no day school near them. Labourers wages are 8d a day with, and 1s to 1s 2d without food.. masons and carpenters 1s 8d with and 2s 6d without food. Farm servants from £4 to £8 and female servants 50s to £4 a year. The people are steady and temperate. The few respectable farmers that are here can read and write; the labourers cannot.

Newton North Castell Coch

About 250 yards north east of the modern farmstead called Newhouse is a perfect example of the moated enclosures within whose secure confines were built many of the county gentry's residences of the 13th -15th centuries that had themselves succeeded the uncomfortable stone or wooden towers placed on artificial mounds. The moat at Castel Coch, which is an almost exact square of 270ft is aligned to the cardinal points. The interior area contains about 8000 square yards. The moat varies in width from 45ft to 55ft at the level. There is no indication that a mound was ever part of the arrangements, and it is fairly certain that such was not the case.

Within the square area was built a residence, now a complete ruin, which was succeeded by the Newhouse already mentioned. But the earliest building erected upon the moated enclosure was probably of wood, and as might be expected, has left in the damp soil no signs of its existence. This was followed, probably in the spacious and flourishing days of Elizabeth, by a small Mansion, which, with many later alterations and additions can still be traced. The building consisted of a large Hall 43 ½ ft by 25ft internally and kitchen. The former was of two stories above the ground floor, the later only one. In the north eastern corner of the Hall was a flight of circular stairs. The main entrance was in the centre of the north front, but the smaller room had a separate entrance from the west. The great fireplace was in the partition wall between the Hall and the kitchen. The withdrawing rooms were on the first floor above the Hall. The moat at the present day is fairly filled, and doubtless was still better so three centuries ago. It was probably crossed by stout wooden planks that were easily removed or by a ride drawbridge. As the necessity for complete isolation gradually ceased, the mode of entrance and exit was improved and a roadway made across the moat. To the south-east, just beyond the moat, are traces of the fish stew. visited 28th June 1920

The Parish Church RCAM Newton North

The ecclesiastic parish with that of Minwear having been united to the parish of Slebech, the Church is no longer used for services and had become roofless. As an interesting example of an unrestored Pembrokeshire Church, whose history is better known than most of the parish churches, every effort should be made to arrest its further decay. It consists of chancel 15 ½ ft by 10ft, nave 27ft by 15 1/2ft , south transeptal Chapel 7 ½ ft by 10ft. And tower 11 ½ ft by 8ft.. along the north and south walls of the chancel for about two-thirds of their length, runs a stone bench. The bowl of the font lies in the south west corner of the nave, it has no distinctive feature whence its date might be ascertained, but it is probably of the late Norman period. The ground storey of the tower is vaulted, and formed the porch of the Church. The stair turret is carried a few feet above the battlements, giving a pleasing effect. visited 30 June 1920

--It is doubtless correct that the earliest Welsh name of Newton was Llys Prawst. – an ecclesia de lisproust is entered in the Taxio of 1291 and Bishop Bernard confirmed to the abbey of St Dogmaels the land and Church of Lispraust.

Nolton. Originally Old Town, the n being attracted as in Nash and Narberth.

RCAM The original name of this parish was Olton or Old Ton. In the foundation charter of Pill Priory to which it was appropriated by Thomas de Rope[de la Roche], it is termed ecclesia de S Madoci de Venter Villa.

Nolton . The village is a little way inland. It has a bellcote Church dedicated to St Madoc containing an effigy of a Knight and Norman carved stone bracket but not much else of interest.

Coal Exporting

Nolton Haven is a popular holiday beach, but visitors are probably unaware that this was once a coal-exporting beach. Note the remains of the old coal Quay, built in 1769.

Coal Mining

Traces of the long-abandoned coal mines can be found all over the area; some of the coal workings ran far out under the sea.

Nolton itself is one mile inland from Nolton Haven.

Travel along the coast and sink down to the little creek of Nolton, where culm is shipped off in the summer months, famed for a species of stone of a purplish cast, capable of bearing th chisel well, and wrought into tomb-stones, steps, and flags of all sorts.

1839 Nolton Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Nolton, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Haverfordwest; containing 227 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the eastern shore of St. St Bride's Bay, and comprises a moderate portion of arable and pasture land, which was inclosed under the provisions of an act of parliament in 1759. The surface is varied, and in some parts hilly; the soil is in general productive, and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. Stone, of a quality not inferior to that of Portland, abounds in the parish; and some quarries were opened, that might have been worked to great advantage, had due care been taken to find out the proper stratum. The repairs and alterations of the cathedral Church of St Davids, towards the close of the last century, were to have been wholly executed with this stone; but the contractor for the buttresses having taken the stratum which lay nearest the surface, instead of sinking lower for that of the best quality, the intention was abandoned. The small Haven near the village of Drewson, in the parish, afforded a facility for conveying the produce of the quarries to its destination; and probably, when further trial has been made of the quality of the stone from the proper stratum, it may again become a shipping-place for that material.

The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £4. 2. 11., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £118, and there is a glebe of 29a. 2r. 20p., valued at £40 per annum; also a glebe-house. The Church is dedicated to St. Madoc: there was formerly a Chapel of ease at the village of Drewson, but it has been for some time in ruins. A school is chiefly supported by an endowment of £18 a year, arising from a bequest by the late John Grant, esq., of Waltham Place, county of Berks, who left funds for a similar purpose to the parish of Roch. A house consisting of a schoolroom on the first floor, and two rooms below for the residence of the master, was erected principally at the expense of the late Rev. Moses Grant. The master is appointed by the rector and churchwardens. At Drewson, properly Druidston, were some Druidical remains, from which that small hamlet originally derived its name; the stones that composed the circle were removed in 1740, and have been used for building purposes.

The Church

The Church is a low undignified structure, and has nothing within or without to demand the attention of the antiquary but its porch resembling that at Roch. Yet the interior at to neatness and decency has the same claim on our praise as that of the adjoining vicarage, and bespeaks the same laudable care. But to the right of the entrance into the cemetery on the outside facing of the wall or hedge that encloses it, appears the mutilated effigy of a crusader, which had like all its fraternity in every Church throughout the country, long since received extreme unction, being whitewashed and whitewashed again, yet not so much disguised by its daubing and mutilation as to leave it in doubt that he was cross legged. That this was not its primary situation we may be well assured; but that in some fanatic iconoclastic age he had not only been removed from his appointed niche in the Church, but had been maimed, and with the removal and maiming, every record of history or heraldry destroyed, by which his name, age, and quality might have been discovered; Nor have I with all industry I have exerted on the occasion, been able to trace the family of the knight, or the time of his excommunication, when this disgraceful position was assigned to the champion of the cross without the pale of the Church.

1851 Aug 29 Nolton (St Madoc) Glynne

The Church has a nave and chancel, and over the west end a Bell gable for two bells; the whole of the outer walls whitewashed. There is a south porch which is vaulted in stone, with moulded ribs. The chancel arch is a rude round one, having an impost on the north. There is no west window. Those on the north are bad and modern; on the south square headed and poor. The west door Pointed. along the west end is a stone bench. The east window of the chancel is a singular one with a First pointed look; but it is doubtful whether it is altered. It had two lights with plain mullion surmounted by a depressed Hood which has foliated corbels. In the angles of this window, internally, are shafts with First Pointed capitals. Near the east window are two niches with chamfered brackets set very low down. The font is early, of a kind very common in Pembrokeshire – an oblong bowl scoloped below, upon a cylindrical stem. There is a part of a stone effigy set up against the wall.

The churchyard, picturesq.ue and shaded with trees has no graves on the north side.

1921 The Parish Church Dedicated to St Madoc RCAM

The Church comprises chancel, nave and south porch, with a double Bell-cote above the west gable. The porch has a plain vault, with moulded ribs. It shelters a much mutilated stone effigy. Long use as a gate post has so weathered the stone that practically all the facial details are lost. It represents a mail clad figure with a heater shaped shield, the head resting on an oblong cushion. It was in its present position in 1851, when Sir Stephen Glynne visited the Church. In the north wall of the nave is a corbel of bracket of 13th century date , on which are three rudely carved human faces, one being bearded, probably a representation of the Trinity . If in its original position (which is doubtful) its purpose is not apparent. Suspended above it on the wall is a wrought iron hook with a twisted shank. The two niches with chamfered brackets, near the east window, mentioned by Glynne, have disappeared, but the brackets set very low down are still in situ. The stone bench at the west end has likewise vanished. The font basin, of cushion type 24 ½ in by 20 in externally and 19 in by 14 in internally stands on a circular shaft with square base; the total height is 39ins.

Two loose stone mortars, one square the other circular, both having the usual heavy horizontal bands are preserved in the Church. One is said to have come from Druidston Chapel, and the other from a Chapel unknown. Neither bears any trace of a wall attachment and, in all likelihood, both are vessels of secular and not ecclesiastical origin and use.

The parish Register contains several entries pertaining to the alterations in the Church.

1767 A paper document attached to the old parchment register of Nolton states that at a vestry meeting held on 23 Feb., 1767, it was agreed that no one on any account whatsoever should be buried within the Church of Nolton.

1789 In this year the chancel was new roofed and ceiled and plastered. A new window put into the eastern end, and the side walls that projected beyond the end, taken down: which wraps had been left in a ragged state ever since the chancel was restored (by Mr. Davies, a former rector, nearly one hundred years ago) by a faculty, and the pine end built on the vault where the rectors have been buried.

1789 The yard wall was repaired and plastered and a new gate made

1801. The arch between the nave and chancel this year widened and raised, being before low and narrow, obstructing the view and sound. The reading desk and pulpit also removed four or five feet from the westward. All this at the expense of the rector, Moses Grant.

1824 The sycamore trees were planted in Nolton churchyard in spring of 1824 and 1825, and a few elms and poplars in 1827 by Francis Warlow, school master, by and with the consent of the Rev. George Harries, the rector.

1876 a drastic restoration saw the Church practically rebuilt, and most of its earlier features swept away.

In the rib-vaulted porch is an effigy of a late 13c knight with his head on a pillow. The nave walls and font may be of c1200. The chancel has been enlarged and is dated 1789 & 1878.

The bowl of the Nolton cup is more V-shaped than the other two Pembrokeshire examples, but the same cable moulding appears around the base. On the bowl too is the stippled inscription (here in capitals) " POCVLVM » ECLESIV E * DE * NOWL TOWNE «1677 ". Height, 5 in.; diam. of bowl, 2½ in.; depth, 3 in. : weight, 4 oz. 14 dwts.

Here again is another instance of the Paten cover of an Elizabethan Chalice remaining whilst the original cup has disappeared. The cover bears the Mark so frequently found on Pembrokeshire vessels between 1574 and 1587. On the footer handle is inscribed " 1575". Diameter, 3 in.; weight, 1 oz. 15 dwts,—There is also a pewter Plate, and bearing the marks of Allen Bright (London). roughly scratched beneath appear the initials po (the last two figures being obliterated).

Nolton Rectory

The glebe house is situated exactly opposite the Church, separated by a road only; and with no pretensions above the character of a cottage, yet furnishes most unexpected and comfortable accommodations. It has marks of great antiquity, being vaulted; and was formerly approached by a gateway opening into a quadrangle, walls five feet thick, and cement as hard as rock

Nolton

The vicarage at Nolton is a most interesting old house, and the following details, given by Rev. J. W. Reese, the late vicar. The front door of the vicarage opens into a Hall which has a stone-vaulted ceiling; the room on the left hand of the Hall has also a stone-vaulted ceiling, and the end wall, opposite to the window, is built concave to the room, but both of these vaulted ceilings are now concealed by plaster. The kitchen, which is behind the room referred to, has also a stone-vaulted ceiling, and the old main walls of the house are 43 inches thick. Mr. Reese added that Bishop Basil Jones, after inspecting the vicarage, expressed the opinion that the old part of the house was at least 500 years old.

1920 The Old Rectory RCAM

Although somewhat modernised, this interesting old house still preserves most of the features recorded in the year 1900 by the then rector : "the front door opens into a Hall which has a stone

In 1594 the benefice of Nolton is said to have been appendant to the manor of Nolton and Perott was then the patron. - Owen's Pem.

It, however, seems that this must have been an error on the part of the Pembrokeshire historian, as the right of patronage had been granted to Pill Priory by Thomas de Rupe, and an advowson once sold was never again attached to a manor. See Blackstones Comment Bk. II., ch. 3.

Moreover, although the post mortem inquisition, held in 1503 on the death of Sir William Perrott of Haroldston, Knt., states that the deceased owned the manor of Nolton, which he held of the barony of Roch by knights service and suit at the court of Rock, no mention is made of his holding the rectory of Nolton, while the Valor Eccl., which was taken in 1554, distinctly states that the prior of Pill was the patron.

It therefore seems probable that the rectory was held in gross, that is to say not appendant to any manor and that on the dissolution of the Monasteries it came into the King's hands. It is significant also that there is no record of any presentation by either the owner of the manor of Nolton or of Roch, and that the only presentation apart from those made by the prior of Pill and the King, was made in 1554 by William Philipps of Picton, esq.. (son and heir of John Philipps of Picton, esq..), who is distinctly stated to have been the patron for that turn under a grant from the Prior and Convent of the late dissolved priory of Pill.

On the north side of the Church yard was the old manor house, the mansion of the Lord of the vill, probably the mutilated crusader; of which perhaps not a vestage would have remained but for a water closet entered from the first floor, as at the parsonage, a peculiarity not often occurring in the old mansions of the country.

Education

1810 Church School at Nolton was built by the Rev. Moses Grant

1847 The State of Education in Wales

Parish of Nolton – on the 5th of January I visited the above parish. There was only a day school there. The schoolroom was an upper room, underneath which the master lived. The school was supported by the executors of Mr Grant, a brother of the late Rector of Nolton, who paid the master a salary of £18 per annum. I found the schoolroom well furnished with desks and benches, all in very good repair. The children were not present , and would not assemble for the next fortnight. The master's salary of £18 per annum was originally paid for educating 20 poor children of the parish of Nolton; but by means of subscriptions raised by the late curate, which amounted to £5 4s 6d the school had been made gratuitous to the whole parish. The attendance was pretty regular, with the exception of Harvest time. The Rev Mr Tasker, the Curate, informed me that agricultural labourers get 8d per day with food of 1s 4d a day on their own findings; Colliers 1s 6d per day. Labourers in the parish were excessively poor; they were a sober and industrious class of men. There was no Sunday School in the parish and no Dissenting Chapel---David Lewis Assistant Burkeley Philipps esquire.

The third son of the Good Sir John 4th Baronet and the younger brother of Sir Erasmus 5th Baronet and Sir John 6th Baronet.

He married Philippa Adams of Holyland Pembroke. Although in the family traditions he was of minor importance, being a younger son, the whole future of the Picton Estate stems from him. He had no children from his marriage but after the death of his wife he was reputed to have adopted an illegitimate daughter by a woman named Maria Philippa Artemisia and gave the young girl the surname Philipps. Her real name was Mary Philippa Artemisia.

Bulkeley Philipps died in 1776 and after his death she married James Child of Begelly and she herself had a daughter whom she named Maria Artemisia. She died in 1786. Her daughter Maria Artemisia, married the son of the Vicar of Roch and Nolton, the Rev. John Grant, who succeeded his father in these livings.

The father, the old Vicar, had been mad for some years. This John Grant was said to have been the man who invented what was called the yard wheel for measuring distances and he was looked at askance in the Haverfordwest of that time running behind his peculiar wheel. Their son was named Richard Bulkeley Philipps Grant. This boy's father, the Rev. John Grant, in addition to inventing the measuring wheel gained a great deal of notoriety because of his condemning those of his parishioners from Roch and Nolton who, whilst looting a wrecked ship containing a cargo of Gunpowder on Druidston Sands caused it to blow up, killing many and blinding others. He was said to have declared openly that it was an act of God punishing them for their wickedness.

Maria Artemisia, upon the death of her first Husband, the Rev. John Grant married as her second the Rev. Alexander Gwyther, the Vicar of Yardley in Worcestershire. By him she had a second son who later became the Rev. James Henry Alexander Gwyther, Vicar of St Mary's Church Haverfordwest.

Richard Burkley Philipps Grant and his half brother, the Rev. James Henry Alexander Gwyther, in turn, inherited the vast Picton Castle estates, both changing their surnames to Philipps, thus causing those of closer relationship to become disinherited.

Druidston[Drewson, Druidstown] 1811 Fenton

[Fenton was travelling parallel to Newgale sands from St David's.]

In the parish of Nolton is a village called Drewson, corruptly for Druidstown, near which on the road leading from Fishguard to Dale there occurs a remarkable inclosure , occupying near an acre of ground called Drewson Chapel. The stones that composed the druidical circle were removed in 1740 to build with, so that there is scarce any thing left to mark the situation of this spacious Gorsedd or place of convention for various purposes.

Druidston RCAM

A small village near the shores of St St Bride's Bay is thus styled by comparatively recent topographical writers and the regular maps, though the local pronunciation is Drewston or Drewson. It need hardly be said that the name has produced a crop of speculations concerning the Druids and these have received support from the presence of an undoubtedly early monument which formerly stood within a few yards of Druidston farm house. The monument , which is said to have been a stone circle was removed (according to Lewis Top. Dictionary) about the year 1740, all but two stones which still survive in situ (Pem Arch Survey). Whether the vanished monument was a circle or a comlech it is impossible to conjecture, though it is more likely to have been a small mound Castle.

The real name of the hamlet is exactly what the local pronunciation gives it – that is Drews-ton. Among the foreign knights who swarmed into England during the reign of Henry I was one called Alfred Drue. He appears as a signatory to several early grants made to religious houses established by the Normans and their allies to Dyfed . Drue seems to have founded drue's ton somewhere within the first quarter of the 12th century. The spot which he chose for his settlement is situated upon the shores of a sandy cove that is flanked by two two headlands which jut out from the land on either side, and afford admirable shelter for small craft in a favourable wind; the protection is increased by a breakwater of pebbles which form a bar or chine across the entrance.

The Lord of Drewston when establishing his little colony, furnished himself and it with a small religious edifice. One of the cottages is still called Druidston Chapel, and in the north corner of the field containing the cottage are slight indications that the small building stood on the site. The highway makes a bend which is inexplicable on any other ground than it had to get round a venerated object. Lewis's Top Dic. Notes the Chapel as having been "for some time in ruins".

Druidston farm

18th century. A former farmhouse built of rubble masonry with low pitch slate roof. There is a massive stone chimney is a house which was extensively altered in the 19th century. A print from the 19th century suggests that there may be an earlier core.

Druidston house

A late 18th century house: 2-storeys, built of rubble masonry with a low pitch slate roof and sash windows beneath flat arched heads. A nearby derelict farmyard is contemporary with the house. These buildings are of rubble with corrugated iron roofs.

Druidston Villa, Stones

Two erect monoliths are visible in field east of Druidston Villa RCAHMW

Druidstone Haven

Druidstone Haven has a long sandy beach, west facing, with a pebble bank behind the high tide line. Usually quite secluded, Druidstone Haven, lies in an impressive setting, with steep cliffs on either side, and to landward. The nearby Druidston hamlet derives its name from the 12th century Norman knight, Dure.

Castle Park RCAM

This field immediately north of Druidston Villa, whose western boundary is the cliff which falls to Druidston Haven, may derive its name from some small earthwork which the sea has removed, and of which all local memory or tradition has perished visited 25th May 1920

Nolton Colliery 1841 Coal Mine Coal mined according to records between the 19th and early 20th centuries but the date of building the 1769 Old Coal Quay would suggest that Mining was taking place earlier. The pit was east of the village of Nolton Haven

Druidston Haven Level driven in search of coal. Not yet positively identified, but probably that level in cliffs 350 yards north of Druidston Villa RCAHMW, Cliff Colliery about ½ mile north was also exporting via Nolton Haven. It was worked from 1850 to 1905 to exploit coal seams beneath St Brides Bay. There are dangerous traces of old coal workings; some travel under the sea and are as deep 300ft. Many on the old workings are flooded and the sites of some of the very early ones unknown.

Remains of Tudor workings and Bell pits also to be found by the unwary.

Nolton Haven

Nolton Haven is a small, relatively sheltered west facing beach, made up of sand and shingle with rock pools and cliffs on either side. As with Little Haven to the south, coal was shipped from Nolton Haven in the past, and on a flat grassy terrace above the beach was the old coal storage yard. Much of the coal came from Trefane Colliery, the remains of which still stand spectacularly above the cliffs about a kilometer to the north.

Old coal Quay built in 1769 Colliery buildings including the old Counting House remains at the end of a tramway.

Orielton

Acc to the RCAM

A modern house, built on a site apparently occupied by successive residences from 1188, when Giraldus Cambrensis found Stephen Wiriet in possession, and the house "haunted by unclean spirits." In 1583 the property passed by marriage to Sir Hugh Owen of Bodowen, Anglesey!. His descendants remained at Orielton until 1809. The new proprietor built the present house.—visited, 23rd May, 1922.

Stephen Wirriott of Orielton is mentioned in 1124 in some of the chronicles of battles of which the history of those times almost entirely consisted;

In 1295 the Wirriotts of Orielton are spoken of as having a 'strong house' there; as all houses were fortified at that time, it was probably extra strong.

1300 Sir David Wyrriot of Orielton attended the Court of Joan de Valance Countess of Pembroke. He was probably the same David who was Sheriff of Carmarthen in 1314 and 1317. and was alive in 1324.

1384 Richard Wyrriott of Orielton was instructed to deliver Manorbier Castle to the king's hands.

1459 Thomas Wyrriot was Sheriff of Pembroke, He had been an officer in the bodyguard of Humphrey duke of Gloucester and when the Duke was arrested and murdered Thomas was imprisoned but he was later released. His heir was

Henry Wyrriot who led troops in Henry VIII's war in France and was High Sheriff of Pembrokeshire in 1549 and 1559. he married Margaret natural daughter of Sir Rhys ap Thomas of Dynevor. their son, George. had a son who died young, and an only daughter, the Elizabeth aforementioned who married Sir Hugh Owen of Bodeon.

In 1580 one Thomas Wirriott was the bitter enemy of Sir John Perrott of Carew; in fact, Sir John's fall was greatly due to his untiring enmity. Wirriott was imprisoned in the Marshalsea during the quarrels and when he lost £1000 in a lawsuit with Sir John, he was thrown into Haverfordwest Gaol in default of payment.

In Lewis Dwnn's Visitation mention is made among gentlemen residing in Pembrokeshire between 1588 and 1613, of Sir Hugh Owen, Knt. of Bodeon, near Aberffraw, Anglesey, who had married Elizabeth, heiress of the Wirriotts of Orielton (she was daughter of George Wyrriot who High Sheriff in 1570); he was M.P. for Pembroke boroughs in 1640, and in 1644 his son Arthur was one of a Committee nominated by Parliament for the defence and safety of Pembrokeshire and the adjoining counties.

At the time of the marriage of Elizabeth and Sir Hugh Owen the Orielton estates of Elizabeth consisted of :-

eighty farms

four water corn mills

and 5400 acres in south and mid Pembrokeshire .

There was again a link with Anglesey in later times. when Sir Hugh Owen, second Baronet, married in 1664, Arme, daughter and heiress of Henry Owen of Bodeon. The first connection is recorded in Boulston Church, on a monument to Lewis Wogan, esq.. of Boulston, who died in 1692. Among his four great-grand-fathers and mothers is mentioned Sir Hugh Owen of Bodeon, Anglesey, and Elizabeth Wirriott of Orielton, Pembrokeshire, whose daughter must therefore have been Lewis's mother, whose death, with that of her husband, Morris Wogan, esq., is recorded on another monument in the same Church.

In the 1670 Hearth Tax Orielton was assessed for 17 hearths
 In 1713 Sir Arthur Owen was Whig Member for the Pembroke boroughs.
 Polling partisans of the Owen family of Orielton wielded pitchforks at polling in Pembroke 1741 to keep opponents out of the polling Hall.
 In 1802 the house is described as neither ancient nor modern, being fronted with brick and the frames of the windows and the cornerstones are of freestone.
 In 1803, when Sir Hugh Owen, sixth Baronet, came of age, 5000 persons are said to have attended the festivities. He died six years after, leaving Orielton and Bodeon away from his cousin Arthur, the succeeding Baronet, to another cousin, John Lord. Lord took the name of Owen, and was created Baronet in 1813. He built the new house in 1809 He died in 1861 and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Hugh Owen, who sold Orielton to M. A. Saurin, esq., of Kilwendeg, near Boncath; he had married Margaretta Jones, niece and heiress to the owner of that place. The house at that time had been deserted and was ruinous necessitating rebuilding.
 The present house has passed through various hands and was bought in 1954 by the naturalist and writer R.M. Lockley for development as a Bird sanctuary. It is now a Field Study Centre.

Introduction

The area we know today as Pembroke could have a very long inhabited history. Unfortunately many remains of previous inhabitations have been destroyed by later building. What do we know?

Stone age and Bronze man lived in Priory cave Monkton, did they also live in Wogan's cave? Mr Cobb suggests a maybe Roman connection, have been found both in Pembroke and at Pennar but did Romans live here or just trade?

Roman coins

St Daniel's Church maybe the pre-Norman religious centre of Penfro?

acc/to the Llandaff records the lands of this area belonged to St Teilo.

Amongst the various documents contained in the collection known as The book of Llan Dav which were brought together in connection with the claim of Landaff to episcopal jurisdiction over all churches of Teilo's foundation, wherever situated are several lists of the churches thus claimed, the lists being unquestionably of earlier date than the collection within which they are preserved. The churches which fall into what may be termed the Teilo area of the later county of Pembroke include

In the deanery of Penbro.

Lann rath. -- this is believed to be Amroth.-- the earliest records of the name Llanreath were in 1833 when it was spelt Land reath

The province of Pembroke comes next after Rhos, lying towards the south and by the sea: indeed, a branch of the sea divides the two. Its main town, also called Pembroke, is the capital of Dyved. It is built high up on an oblong plateau of rock, and it extends along the north and the south af an inlet of the sea which runs down from Milford Haven. Hence its name Pembroke, which means the head of the estuary.

Arnulf de Montgomery was believed to be the first to build a fortification here, from wooden stakes and turf, in the days of Henry I, King of the English. It was not very strong and it offered little resistance. When he went back to England, Arnulf left the fortress and a small garrison in the charge of Gerald of Windsor, a stalwart, cunning man, who was his constable and lieutenant. Without more ado the inhabitants of South Wales began to lay siege to the place. They had just lost their prince, Rhys ap Tewdwr, a warlike leader, who had been betrayed by his own troops in Brecknockshire, and they were left with his son, Gruffydd, who was still a boy. Under cover of darkness fifteen knights deserted the fortress in desperation, clambered into a boat and tried to escape over the water. The very next morning Gerald transferred their estates to fifteen of their own men-at-arms, dubbing them there and then as knights. The siege lasted a Long time, and those inside were greatly reduced and near the end of their tether. When they had hardly any provisions left, Gerald, who, as I have said, was a cunning man, created the impression that they were still well supplied and were expecting reinforcements at any moment: for he took four hogs, which was about all that they had, cut them into sections and hurled them over the palisade at the besiegers. The following day he thought of an even more ingenious stratagem. He signed a letter with his own seal and had it placed just outside the lodging of Wilfred, Bishop of St David's, who chanced to be in the neighbourhood. There it would be picked up almost immediately, and the finder would imagine that it had been dropped accidentally by one of Gerald's messengers. The purport of the letter was that the constable would have no need of reinforcements from Arnulf for a good four months. When this despatch was read to the Welsh, they immediately abandoned the siege and went off home.

The next thing Gerald did was to marry Nest the sister of Gruffydd, Prince of South Wales, with the object of giving himself and his troops a firmer foothold in the country. In the process of time she bore him a large number of children, both boys and girls. With the help of this family the sea-coast of South Wales was held secure by the English, and Ireland, too, was stormed,

1589 George Owen's Pembroke

Pembroke

The town of Pembroke standeth upon a long back or ridge of rock, being all one street in length without any cross Streets. and being walled about with a strong wall of lime and stone and compassed on each side with a branch of Milford being the upper end of the creek of Pennarmouth where the said creek parteth itself in two and, running up on each side of the town, compasseth the same as a strong moat, flowing at every tide in such sort that no access on horse or foot is permitted to the town but over two bridges, the town having three gates only and the town walls being strongly defended with six flanker towers in such sort as out of them the whole walls may be scoured and defended from approach of enemies. And in some of the same towers are fair springs of clear, sweet running water for the necessary relief of the people within the town, not to be cut off by any means.

At the west end of the town on the part where the said creek parteth itself into two branches standeth a fair, strong and large Castle, strongly walled with a mighty thick wall all built of lime and stone. Having within the gate two large courts, an inner and an outer, being compassed with strong Garretted walls and set forth in the outer parts with divers flanker towers of all sorts necessary for the defence thereof. The said Castle is seated upon a high main rock of thirty and in most places forty foot high, naturally steep in most places and the rest easily to be made in such sort that if the Castle walls might be battered (as most thereof cannot be), yet were it not possible to ascend up the said rock to enter the breach, the same being so high and inaccessible. Besides the tides daily flow about the same and the ooze and slime whereof the channel is full doth mightily defend the said Castle from any assault of enemies.

This Castle is thought almost impregnable. The weakest part thereof is a small ditch that joineth to the town, which is only defended with a dry ditch, and which may be made very strong and deep. The town walls springeth from the said Castle and, stretching forth on each side of the said town, enclose the whole town, as it were, within one outer or base court of the said Castle. All the Castle walls are standing very strong without decay, only the roofs and leads having been taken down. Within the said Castle there is the great cave called the Wogan, able if occasion were to receive a great multitude of people, being a place free from all assaults or battery, and in the same is a well of fresh water of great depth which cannot be taken away by any means possible, serving for the use of the people within the said Castle. The gate or entrance of the said Castle is made strong divers ways, as with drawbridges and portcullises and other means . . .

Danial Defoe records” we crossed over the isthmus to Pembroke which stands on the East shore of the great Haven of Milford.

This is the largest and richest and at this time the most flourishing town of all south Wales . Here are a great many English merchants and some of them men of good business and they told us there were nearly 200 sail of ships belonging to the town small and great.called little England beyond Wales.

1804 The Scenery, Antiquities and Biography of South Wales Benj Heath Malkin

As you proceed up the harbour , this magnificent piece of water is forked by a peninsula in front, dividing the great reach up to Burton Ferry from Down Pool which forms so interesting an approach to Pembroke. Here ,as in all the numerous estuaries and creeks branching out from the great body the scenery becomes richer as less expanded. Fertility and beauty combine. The approach from the water shews the Castle and the town to the most possible advantage. The noble and extensive ruin, hanging on the edge of the pool, with the mouth of the cavern opening as a sally port and the buildings of the ancient borough crouching under its command. the petty trade giving life to the scene without obscuring its predominant features of rural interest.

The town is old and has declined in the same proportion as Haverfordwest has risen in importance. The buildings about the water side and generally in the suburbs are verging fast on a state of decay; but the principal street which is long and wide has a very respectable appearance though without the air of business generally expected in a county town. It has however its attractions to call the people of Castlemartin together on days of great rejoicing Sir Hugh Owen's roast Ox produced a jovial confusion as could be witnessed in a better place. It is situated in a plentiful country; it has little or no trade; and under the circumstances affords a cheap retirement to many families with slender incomes

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis

Pembroke, a borough, Market-town, and sea-port, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of Castlemartin, county of Pembroke, in South Wales, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Milford 10 (S. by E.) from Haverfordwest, and 248 (W.) from London; the borough containing 7412 inhabitants, of whom 5441 are in the parish of St. Mary , 1223 in the parish of St. Michael, and 748 in part of St. Nicholas', or Monkton, parish. The name of this place is derived from the words Pen Bro, literally signifying a headland, or promontory, and originally applied to a district nearly corresponding in extent with the present hundred of Castlemartin, stretching out into the sea, and separating Milford Haven, on the north, from the Bristol Channel on the south. On the erection of a Castle, and the consequent growth of the town, the name of the district in which they were situated was transferred to them, and subsequently to the whole of the county, of which that town became the capital. The early history of the place is involved in some confusion. It is stated by Giraldus Cambrensis, that Arnulph de Montgomery, in the reign of Henry I., raised a slender fortress of stakes and turf here, which, on his return into England, he placed under the custody of his constable and lieutenant, Giraldus de Windsor. In the Chronicle of Caradoc of Llancarvan, who was contemporary with Giraldus, it is expressly recorded that the Castle was attacked in 1092, and again in 1094, by the forces of Cadwgan ab Bleddyn , but that it was so strongly fortified as to baffle every effort of that chieftain to reduce it. The latter of these dates, which is some years prior to the accession of Henry I., contradicts the statement of Giraldus Cambrensis, with respect to the time of the original foundation; and the result of the attacks by so formidable an enemy is at variance with his description of the character of the fortress.

Arnulph de Montgomery, on the accession of Henry I., having joined in a confederacy against that sovereign, the Castle of Pembroke, together with his other estates, became forfeited to the crown, and the King afterwards conferred the Castle, together with the lordship of Carew and several other manors, on Giraldus de Windsor, Arnulph's lieutenant, who had married Nêste, daughter of Rhÿs ab Tewdwr.

Norman Conquest of England

began the reign of Rhys ap Tewdwr, the last Prince of South Wales. His accession met, apparently, with little opposition. The legend that he returned from exile in Brittany to claim the throne of his ancestors is an embellishment of later chroniclers.

These were troublous times for Dyfed. In 1078 Menevia was “miserably devastated by the pagans”, and Bishop Abraham was slain. This was the Bishop the tombstone of whose sons was found a in the late 1900’s in the cathedral. The venerable Sulien, who had resigned only two years before, was compelled to resume his episcopal charge. It was not Long before the saintly old man, who had reluctantly quitted his retirement was called upon to take part in still more stirring scenes, Rhys ap Tewdwr was unable to protect the ecclesiastical metropolis of his dominions and was being hard pressed from another quarter. Trahaiarn ap Caradog from North Wales joined by the chiefs of Powys and Gwent and tried to expand his kingdom into the South. Rhys, found his natural ally in Gruffydd ap Conan, who, as he had been beaten back in his attacks on the North of Wales previously had joined Rhys in the south.

His forces probably landed at Porth Cais and where met and blessed by the Bishop

The battle was fought in Cardiganshire , Traihaiarn and the Chiefs of Powys and of Gwent were killed. Gruffydd became ruler of North Wales and Rhys the South

Gruffydd was betrayed into the hands of the Normans later by one of his own chiefs and was imprisoned at Chester

The Welsh chronicals tend not to favour Rhys

It would appear from the Domesday Book that Rhys paid an annual sum of £40 to King William this would indicate some sort of agreement with him. We also know that Neste - Rhys daughter was, some say “educated”, some say held as a hostage at the King’s Court.

1081 William the Conquerer came to St David’s on pilgrimage

William the Conquerer died in 1087

Rhys ap Tewdwr met his death when he was killed in battle by an old enemy Jestyn -- a relative who was ruler of Glamorgan and who was aided by the son of a Welsh ruler from the Cardigan district called Einion. Einion had fought with the Normans in several campaigns and enlisted the help of some of his Norman friends especially one called Fitzhamon who with eleven of his friends joined the force to raid the lands belonging to Rhys. Einion was promised the hand of Jestyn’s daughter Nesta (whether she consented or not) as reward for his support. Rhys who was said to be about 90 was captured with his sons and beheaded.

As far as I have been able to find out Rhys was survived by three children. I suspect his eldest son was the Rhys killed in 1081. The rest all but an infant Gruffydd died with him. He was survived by two daughters Nesta who was at the court of the English King and Angharad.

This left the whole area of South Wales in complete flux. There was no one capable of succeeding Rhys; his wife was dead, his surviving son was an infant. The only relative other than his daughters able to rule was the treacherous Einon and there was so much hostility towards him that he dare not appear in the area.

In fact Einon had troubles enough. Jestyn had paid off the Normans etc who had supported him but refused to carry out his promise to Einion regarding Nesta. Einion was not very happy about this and had a word with his Norman friends. They returned and Jestyn had to flee, they divided Jestyn's estates up among them giving Einion the poorest portion, Miskin, but he also had Nesta and her personal property.

The Northern parts of the Estates belonging to Rhys were being invaded from the North.

A Norman Knight Martin de Turribus who held lands in both Somerset and Devon landed at Newport and set up a base at Nevers. He proceeded to defeat the Welsh at a battle at Morvill. It is interesting that the people living at Meline, Eglwysrw and Nantgwyn are recorded as welcoming him without resistance. What is not recorded in the chronicles is that his grandson Sir William Martin was married to Angharad daughter of Lord Rhys whose land it was, as she had inherited it from her father. It is very interesting as we shall see in the south that when tracing the estates in the north part of the county many of those who came into the hands of the Normans came not by conquest but by marriage. Many of the Normans were single men and took Welsh wives.

While Martin de Turribus was sorting out the North of the property belonging to the granddaughter of Rhys, Arnulph de Montgomery came to the South. He was the son of Roger the great Earl of Shrewsbury, Roger de Belesme had not come to the England with William the Conqueror as he was the knight entrusted by William to help William's wife Matilda to rule Normandy in his absence so therefore must have been well trusted by the King.

From Arnulph's father the Welsh Montgomery takes its name, though the Castle was built by Baldwin in the Conqueror's time. But Roger retook it from the Welsh in 1090 and named it after the Norman seat of his family. He was perhaps the most influential and turbulent baron in Europe, and had married Mabel (the wicked daughter of wicked William Talvas), heiress of the grand old house of Belesme. This evil dame bore him five sons:

The notorious Robert; who assumed the title and lands of Belesme when his mother was murdered in her bath

William, a clerk.

Hugh of Chester, called by the Welsh, " Goch " (the Red), and slain by them in 1098

Robert of Poitou.

Arnulph, who seized Southern Pembrokeshire.

A sister Mabel, married Fitz Hamon whose name is associated with a few acts of murder and double dealing in connection with Glamorgan.

Of this family Henry of Huntingdon says that their sins were enough to frighten the devils themselves.

Roger de Montgomery (father of Arnulph) died He had been made earl of Shrewsbury 1071

Brut y Tywysogyon edited by Thomas Jones Cardiff 1952

"One Thousand and one hundred (actually 1102) was the year of Christ when there was treachery between Henry, King of England and Robert, earl of Shrewsbury, who was called de Belleme, and Arnulf, his brother, who had come to Dyfed and had established the Castle of Pembroke. And when the King heard that they were working treachery against him, he summoned them to find out the truth concerning that. But they sought pretexts to make an excuse, for they could not trust themselves to the King. And the King rejected their excuses after learning of their treachery. And when they knew that the King had learned of their treachery, and they dared not show themselves to him, they occupied their castles and fortified them, and summoned help to them from all sides and summoned to them the Britons who were under them, together with their leaders, namely the sons of Bleddyn ap Cynfyn, Cadwgan, Iorwerth and Maredudd. And they received them with honour, and gave them gifts and promised them many things and gladdened the land with liberty. And a second time they fortified their castles and encompassed them with ditches and strong walls and prepared provision and gathered together knights and gave them gifts. Robert occupied four castles, namely Arundel and Blyth and Bridgenorth and it was against Bridgenorth that the whole treachery had been aimed for he had built that without the King's permission and Shrewbury. Arnulf occupied Pembroke alone. And immediately after that they assembled hosts and summoned the Britons along with them. And while they were doing that Arnulf thought to make peace with the Irish and seek aid from them. And he sent messengers, that is, Gerald his officer, and many others, to Ireland and he asked for the daughter of King Muircertach for his wife. And that he obtained easily. The messengers came back joyful. King Muircertach sent his daughter and many armed ships along with her to the aid of his son in law. And for that reason the earls waxed proud against the King, without wishing for peace or agreement from him. And King Henry gradually gathered a host. And first he took the Castle of Arundel. And thereupon through agreement and promises he gained possession of Blyth. And at last he came towards the Castle of Bridgenorth and with him a great host. And after surveying the Castle from a distance he took council as to how he might capture the earl or subdue him or drive him out of the whole kingdom. And he resolved in council to send messengers to the Britons; and he summoned to him in particular Iorwerth ap Bleddyn, and he promised him more than he would obtain from the Earl. And he gave to Iorwerth freely, without rent or payment, that portion of Wales which was in the hands of those earls, for his lifetime so Long as the King lived; that was Powys and Ceredigion and half of Dyfed the other portion was in the hands of Fitz Baldwin and Ystrad Tywi and Cydweli and Gower. And when Iorwerth ap Bleddyn was going towards the King's Castle, he sent his war band to plunder the territory of earl Robert. And the war band, cruelly and hostilely executing their Lord's behest, gathered vast plunder and ravaged the land and pillaged it; for the earl had before that ordered his men to take their flocks and herds and all their chattels into the land of the Britons, for he placed trust in them, not supposing that he would meet with opposition from them, not remembering the wrongs that the Britons had formerly suffered at the hands of Roger his father, and Hugh, his brother, and at the hands of their men, which was held in remembrance by the Britons.

Cadwgan, however, and Maredudd, sons of Bleddyn, were with the earl, knowing naught of that. And when the earl heard that, he despaired; and not trusting the help that was with him, because Iorwerth and his men had deserted him for Iorwerth was foremost of the Britons and the most powerful he sought a truce of the King to make peace with him or to leave the kingdom altogether.

Whilst they were about those things, Arnulf and his men had gone to meet his wedded wife and the fleet that had come to his aid. In the meantime Magnus, King of Germany (correctly of Norway), and with him a fleet, came a second time to Anglesey; and after felling for himself some trees for timber he returned to Man. And there he built three castles and a second time filled Man, which he had previously left desolate, with his men. And he asked for the daughter of Muircertach, King of Ireland, as a wife for his son.[NB she was already wife of Arnulf] And he obtained her easily and gladly. And he set him up as King over that island. And there he stayed that winter.

And when earl Robert heard that, he sent messengers to him to beg help for himself; but he obtained none from him. And when the earl saw that he was besieged on all sides, he asked permission of the King to leave the kingdom; and the King granted it to him. And then he left all that was his and sailed to Normandy. And then the King sent to Arnulf and commanded him to go after his brother and to leave the kingdom or else to come at the King's will with his head in his lap. And when Arnulf heard that, he preferred to go after his brother than to submit to the King's will, and he surrendered his Castle to the King; and the King sent a garrison to keep it.

And after that, Iorwerth ap Bleddyn made peace with his brothers and he shared the territory with them. And after a short while he seized Maredudd, his brother, and imprisoned him in the King's prison. And he made peace with Cadwgan, his brother, and gave him Ceredigion and a portion of Powys. And thereupon Iorwerth went to the King, thinking that he would have his promises from the King. But the King did not keep faith with him, but took from him Dyfed and the Castle and gave them to a certain knight called Saer. And Ystrad Tywi and Cydweli and Gower he gave to Hywel ap Goronwy.

" Henry 1st was no more restrained in his passions than any other powerful ruler of the 12c. It made little difference to him that the beautiful Nest, daughter of the Welsh Prince Rhys ap Tudor, had been placed in his care as a royal ward;(she was William Rufus's hostage for the good behaviour of her family) he fell in love with Nest and seduced her, and she bore him a son. In those days, however, there was an accepted way of dealing with such a situation. Nest's baby son was named Duke of Gloucester and King Henry gave Nest in marriage to one of his barons, Gerald de Windsor, who it seems was in love with her himself. Gerald took his new wife with him to South Wales, where the fame of her beauty soon spread far beyond those parts as far, even, as the kingdoms of Gwynedd and Powys in the north. Though Gerald was a Norman Baron and maintained an armed force in Pembroke Castle, he was on terms of slightly uneasy peace with Prince Cadwgan, Welsh ruler of this land of Ceredigion as well as of Powys.....Then came a Christmas when Cadwgan ordained a great Eisteddfod in South Wales, to which everyone of distinction flocked including Nest. And with the guests came Cadwgan's daredevil son Owain. Owain lived in his father's second kingdom of Powys, in a hunting -lodge called Plas Eglwyseg at the head of a secret glen north of the Dee. Here he had gathered about him a band of reckless fighting men, with whom he would sally forth by the path he called his war path to hunt or raid or harass King Henry's men -at- arms. When he came to his father's Eisteddfod and set eyes on the lovely Nest he determined at once to carry her off.

That very night he and his men broke into the Castle of Pembroke, (other authorities say Carew or Newcastle Emlyn) set fire to it and dragged Nest from her bed and carried her off to Owain's retreat at Plas Eglwyseg, where (it appears) she lived quite happily with her captor for some time as it alleged she bore him a child.

But the mad action of Owain ap Cadwgan brought terrible consequences. King Henry, appealed to by Gerald de Windsor ordered Prince Cadwgan to restore the stolen countess in pain of losing his kingdoms. Cadwgan's attempts to comply met with flat defiance from his son, who eluded all efforts to capture him and war broke out Throughout Wales. Norman barons aided Cadwgan's Welsh rivals to take Powys from him and others robbed him of much of his southern kingdom. The new rulers of Powys disinherited Owain and at last succeeded in driving him out of his refuge at Plas Eglwyseg, whence he fled to Ireland, leaving Nest homeless.

The deserted beauty made her way south to be re-united with Gerald. A year or two later there was an attack by a raiding party from Ireland on South West Wales. This was opposed by the Gerald de Windsor in alliance with the Welsh. Owain had accompanied the raiders, but now elected to change sides and fight for his native land. In the midst of the battle Gerald recognized Owain, and even though he was fighting on the same side, he and his bodyguard fell upon Owain and slew him, thus wiping out, to the satisfaction of everyone who counted in those days, the dishonour he had suffered at Owain's hands.

Gerald de Windsor ended his warlike career by dying peacefully at his wife's Castle of Carew(c1120) but his wife's career was not finished. Though her children were now grown up and married, Nest still had her beauty - She transferred her affections to Stephen Constable of Cardigan Castle then to the Sheriff of Pembroke, presenting each of them with a son.

Lewis 1839 states that :-

According to Caradoc of Llancarvan, Giraldus or Gerald de Windsor rebuilt the Castle of Pembroke in the year 1105, on a more advantageous site, called "Congarth Vechan," and removed into it his family and his goods. Soon after this, as we are informed by different authorities, Owain, son of Cadwgan ab Bleddyn, having heard the beauty of Nest extolled at a banquet given by Cadwgan either at the Castle of Aberteivy, or at that of Eare Weare in the parish of Amroath, came, under the pretence of relationship, to pay her a visit at this place, and becoming enamoured during the interview, resolved upon carrying her away by force. For this purpose, having obtained the aid of some young men as profligate as himself, he returned in the evening to the Castle, which he entered unobserved; then, placing a guard over the chamber of Nêste, he set fire to the building, and, in the confusion and alarm that ensued, forcibly conveyed her and her children to his residence in Powys. Other writers, however, are of opinion that the Castle of Carew was the scene of this outrage and abduction.]

1109 Gilbert de Clare, surnamed Strongbow, was created Earl of Pembroke by Henry, and thus became possessed of the royal territories in this quarter, and of the Castle of Pembroke.

1138 The earldom was became a county palatine, with the privilege of 'jura regalia;' and under the authority of its earl, a session and a monthly county court were held within the Castle. In the latter all pleas of the crown were determined, fines levied, and recoveries passed; the writs were issued in the name of the earl, who held also at this place his courts of chancery and exchequer. Strongbow enlarged the Castle, which he strengthened with additional fortifications, and made in every respect a residence suitable to the dignity of the elevated rank he held. He also incorporated the inhabitants of the town which had arisen under the protection of the Castle, and surrounded it with a lofty embattled wall, defended by numerous bastions, and entered by three principal gates and a postern.

Gilbert de Clare,s grand daughter' husband William Marshal succeeded in 1199 he and his sons built Castle as it stands today with well made right angle entrances of a sort designed by the Infidel to resist a battering ram, copied by the Marshalls when they got home; the keep now occupies the site once humped by the motte

The last descendent was John Hastings died 1389

Somewhere near the east end of town was a Hospise dedicated to Mary Magdalene probably stood outside the Gate towards Merlin's Cross.

There were two town crosses one outside the Old Cross Saws the other outside the Lion Hotel but there seems to have been a central meeting place at the Elm tree where the stocks were for the punishment of wrongdoers.

When required for the third time to restore the same, he utterly refused and even promised worse, Gerald sent word to him that unless he restored the oxen he would be placed immediately under sentence of excommunication, to which he replied that he would not dare to excommunicate the King's constable in his own Castle. Gerald replied that when the sheriff heard all the bells of the whole Monastery rung at triple intervals then he would know without doubt that he was being excommunicated.

Immediately the messengers had returned, by authority of his legation, with candles lit, he solemnly gave the sentence of excommunication on him, in the presence of the monks of that place, and many of the Clergy of the country, and likewise caused all the bells to be sounded together, as was customary , to confirm the sentence or rather to announce the fact.

On the morrow, the robber came to the Castle of Lanwadein, before David , the diocesan Bishop, and Gerald and his colleague, Master Michael, whom the archbishop had attached to him, who had gone there, restitution having been made and satisfaction given, when he was beaten with rods, he was to be absolved.

Patent Roll, 49 Henry III, m . 16 (Cal., pp423 4)

Whereas John de Warenna and William de Valencia with armed men to the number of about a hundred and twenty men as well horse as foot, have now landed in the parts of Pembroke and keep themselves there, and many adversaries of the King and the realm from beyond seas, if they knew of their landing which has been made without the King's knowledge and will, as their leaving the realm was made peacefully and without impediment, would prepare to enter the realm with more will and spirit, to disturb the peace, or to give aid to the said John and William if they proposed to grieve the realm; the King has commanded the barons and bailiffs of the ports to keep their shore manfully and strongly against the invasion of anyone; and whereas the King has appointed Brian de Guiz as keeper of the parts of Somerset and Dorset, he commands all men of those counties to be of counsel and aid to the said Brian, in the keeping of the peace and especially in the defence of the maritime parts there; and if any are disobedient or remiss in executing the kings mandates, the King will betake him forthwith to their persons and goods, notwithstanding any liberty, as against those who care not whether the kings and realm be given over to confusion and dispersion. Mandate to the said Brian to be keeper of the peace of the counties accordingly; and the King has commanded the sheriff to be of aid and counsel to him. And as false rumours are being spread of the King, whereby trouble may be again stirred in the realm, the King has written to the said sheriff in the form of these presents, and if the sheriff is lax, the said Brian is to urge him to be diligent for the love of the King and the common utility of the realm.

Welsh Roll 10 Edward I, m, 10d (Cal. p 247)

Order to William de Valancia and to his bailiffs of Pembrok, Roger de Martuo Mari and his bailiffs of Sencer, William son of Martin and his bailiffs of Kameys, and others, not to have any communication with the Welsh rebels.

1283

1284

Although Edward I drew up the Statute of Wales which laid down that Welsh Common Law, language and customs would be respected. And which did not seek to put an end to "gravelkind" the Welsh system of divided inheritance but it did add the provision that illegitimate sons could not be successors, that lawful widows were to be entitled to a dower, and that women could not succeed when there was no male heir.

Pembroke was to continue as a County Palatine owing direct allegiance to the crown where the earls were undisputed rulers owing no more than feudal loyalty to the King - they were allowed to administer their own justice, raise revenues according to their own determination and make and enforce whatever laws they wished. Close Roll, 9 Edward III m19 (Cal pp411 2)

To the treasurer and barons of the exchequer. William Crippynghis, of co. Pembroke in Wales, has besought the King by his petition as Thomas de Hompton, at the time when Roger de Mortuo Mari, late earl of March , had the custody of co. Pembroke by the King's commission, and Thomas was the steward of the earl there, had caused William to be taken and Long detained in prison, and while he was in that prison compelled him by force of such imprisonment to make a letter of obligation to the earl to pay 200 marks to the earl at certain terms contained in the deed, which was delivered to the exchequer for levying that money for the King's use by reason of the earl's forfeiture; and thereupon prosecution was so far made against William for the King at the exchequer that William, appearing in person before the treasurer and barons in the exchequer, asserted that he had made that deed by force of imprisonment as aforesaid, and offered to verify this in the way which the King's court should think fit; and afterwards, because William believing that a certain issue of the affair had been ordained by the King's court, did not come to discuss that affair in his absence before the treasurer and barons on the day given to him according to the process held thereupon, to answer upon that affair, it was considered there that the King should recover £128 6s 8d., this being in arrears of the said 200 marks, the said answer of William not being discussed to be pleased to grant that William may be admitted to such verification, notwithstanding the aforesaid consideration, the King considering that the said deed ought to be of none effect if it should be found to have been made as the said Stephen (sic) pretends to verify, and wishing to do William a favour, in discharge of his conscience, orders the treasurer and barons to admit him to the said verification in the same state in which it was before the said judgement was rendered, the record and process held before them upon the premises being viewed, those being summoned before them who ought to be ; and to cause justice to be done further in that affair both for the King and for William, notwithstanding the same consideration, causing the execution of the said £128 6s 8d so recovered, Levied from William's lands and chattels for the King's use, to be superseded.

Charters of Pembroke

Pembroke received its first charter of INCORPORATION from Gilbert Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, in the time of Stephen.

1168, Henry II. confirmed to them all the privileges which they had previously enjoyed; also granting that they should not answer in any plea out of their own town, unless the same should concern the crown; that they should be exempt from toll in Bristol, Gloucester, Winchester, Devonshire, Cornwall, Rochelle, and Normandy; and that they should have an eight days' annual Fair, beginning at the feast of St. Peter and St. Paul.

By a charter of King John's the freedom from toll appears to have been extended, and a second Fair of two days granted, commencing on the eve of John the Baptist.

All former charters were confirmed by Richard III. in the 2nd year of his reign, by Henry VIII. in the 9th year, by Edward VI. in the 1st year, and lastly by James I. in the 5th, of his reign. In the grant by Richard it was declared, that "the town shall now become a corporate body, instead of being, as hitherto, incorporate; and shall consist of a mayor, two bailiffs, and the burgesses of the said place."

The title of the Corporation was "the Mayor, Bailiffs, and burgesses of the town and borough of Pembroke," and the government was vested in a mayor, an indefinite number of common-councilmen, a town-clerk, two bailiffs, two serjeants-at-Mace, and an unlimited number of freemen or burgesses; the mayor and common-council forming the controlling body. The mayor, who was a Justice of the Peace concurrently with the county magistrates, also coroner, and a judge of the "Fortnight Court," was elected in July, by the burgesses, out of three members of the commoncouncil proposed in council as candidates. The councilmen were appointed by a majority of the council and the mayor, and those of them who had served the office of mayor were styled aldermen: one of the bailiffs was chosen by the mayor, the other by the council; and the serjeants-at-Mace were elected in a similar manner.

TRANSLATION OF THE CHARTER OF Richard II TO Pembroke

exhibited at the Council Chamber, Pembroke. 30/8/35

by A.J.Williams, M.A. LL.B.

Richard, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland too, all to whom these present letters shall come, greeting.

We have inspected the letters, patent and exemplification, under the seal of the late Father, Adam, Bishop of Menevia, lately made in these words:

Adam, by divine permission, Bishop of Menevia, to all to whom the present letters shall come, greetings, and the permanent memory of these exploits. We deem it worthy and an acceptable work to God, and we trust to do a profitable service, if through us the noble exploits of Kings, and things particularly useful to the condition of our Diocese, which have Long been buried in oblivion, be discovered and brought to light by the aid of our pen. We have discovered in our Treasury, and among the archives of our Church of Menevia, among other old records in an ancient book, the perfect tenours of charters of the old text, free from all faults and suspicions, granted by Henry of renowned memory, late King of England, Duke of Aquitaine and Count of Anjou, to the town and burgesses of Pembroke and Haverford. The tenour of this charter is a grant to the town and burgesses of Pembroke, with a rubric of that kind written in red ink, " The charter of Pembroke, word for word, with nothing added or taken away, is known to be on this wise".

Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England, Duke of Normandy and Aquitaine and Count of Anjou, to the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls and Justices, Barons and Sheriffs, and to all his faithful people of all England, Wales, Ireland, Normandy, Brittany, Anjou, Poitou, Gascony, and to all his men, whether dwelling on this side or beyond the sea, greeting. Know ye that I have given and granted, and by this my present charter, have confirmed to my burgesses of Pembroke all their liberties, immunities and free customs as freely and fully as they had them in the time of King Henry, my grandfather.

Wherefore ,I will and firmly enjoin that all persons who shall enter the port of Milford with merchandise, whether they wish to buy or sell on the land, shall come to the bridge of Pembroke and sell and buy there. Or, if they wish otherwise, let them do business at the Cross, discharging their lawful customs; and that all merchandise which is bought in the County of Pembroke to be carried into England, ought to be shipped at the bridge at Pembroke, paying their customs; and that all persons who come to my Market at Pembroke, shall have the security of my peace from the Ford of Landfey and from Stentbrigge, and from the Great Ditch at Pencoyt and from the Passage from the hour of nine on the Sabbath to sunset on Monday, if they do not break my peace.

I also command that if any of my burgesses of the said town, for one year and a day shall hold house or lands which belong to the said town, without reproach, and anyone shall afterwards claim right, let him not have it if he shall have in the meantime remained in my kingdom.

If any man of whatsoever place remain in the same town for a year and a day, without reproach, whether he be a Freeman or a serf, he shall ever after remain my Freeman and a burgess of the same town.

And, when a burgess of the said town, by whatsoever death and in whatsoever place, dies on land or sea with a will or without a will, his heir shall have all his goods by payment of a relief of twelve pence.

I also grant that the burgesses of the said town shall have grazing rights in my forest of Nerbart and Coytrath, and timber rights in the same town by permission of the forester, and they may take decayed wood to burn wheresoever they shall find it; and if they shall have swine in my forests, they shall be acquitted of pannage.

I also will and command that those things which the aforesaid burgesses shall perform in the said town, if the debtors are willing to render in the same town, they may take their pledge (Cattle). But , if it shall happen that my said burgesses ought to go into our army, the safe keeping of my town being in the hands of their warden, let them go with my bailiff, so that they may return at night. But if the army be raised by their warden, so that the merchants may serve me at my camp, the custody of the town being safe, they shall go.

Whatsoever merchandise any of my aforesaid burgesses shall buy, if anyone shall claim the same as stolen, he shall acquit himself by oath and by his Witnesses, and he shall lose the same chattel and what he gave for it.

Also, my aforesaid burgesses shall answer no plaint out of their hundred unless it be that which pertains to the royal crown. Their forfeiture in the hundred and shire court is twelve pence.

All the merchants of the County of Pembroke, by the appointment of the warden of the burgesses, shall come to their Merchant guild.

I also will and grant, and firmly enjoin that the same burgesses shall have the aforesaid liberties and their customs well, quietly and freely, with the addition of their other liberties and customs which they still remember.

Know ye, furthermore, that I have given and granted, and by this, my present charter, confirm to the same my burgesses acquittance from toll, pontage and havenage, and from all customs whatsoever at Bristol, Gloucester, Winchester, Devon, Cornwall, Rochelle, Normandy and Throughout all my lands in commotes, in burgages, in castles, in towns, in fairs and Markets, in uplands, in woods, in plain, in roads, in lands, in waters and in all other places. I also forbid anyone to do injury to them in the matters which I have granted to them, and by this my present charter, have confirmed; nor shall anyone draw them into pleas concerning the liberty and acquittance granted to them under forfeiture of fifty pounds sterling.

Furthermore, be it Known to you that I have given and granted to the same, my burgesses of Pembroke, a Fair of eight days at the feast of the Apostles, Peter and Paul, and to all coming to the same, my firm peace, those being excepted who have forfeited my peace, and they shall have the same liberties and customs at the Fair as they have at my Market in the same town on Sunday.

And if any heir is such, (ie. in respect of his youth), that he cannot hold and defend his land, if the burgess who has died left a will, let his heir and the inheritance remain the custody to which he,

on his death bed, committed him. But, if he shall not have left a will, then the heir and inheritance, by the advise and consent of the nearest relatives, being my burgesses, shall remain in the custody of any one of his friends. In witness of the foregoing, we have ordered our seal to be hereto attached.

Given in our manor of Landfey, the seventh day of the month of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand three hundred and sixty eight, and in the eighth year of our consecration. We, (ie. Richard II), therefore having perused the tenour of the exemplification of the said letters of the aforesaid Bishop, at the request made to us by the burgesses of Pembroke, the tenour of these presents we have made to be exemplified. In witness wherefore we have caused these, our letters, to be made patent. Witness ourselves at Westminster on the sixth day of the month of February in the first year of our reign.]]

Municipal Corporation Act

Under this Act the Corporation is styled the "Mayor, Aldermen, and burgesses," and consisted of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, forming the council of the borough, which is divided into two wards, and of which the municipal and parliamentary boundaries are the same. The council elects the mayor annually on November 9th, out of the aldermen or councillors; and the aldermen triennially from among the councillors, or persons qualified as such, one-half going out of office every three years, but being re-eligible: the councillors were chosen by and out of the enrolled burgesses, on November 1st, one-third going out of office every year. Aldermen and councillors must each have had a property qualification amounting to £500, or be rated at £15 annual value. The burgesses consisted of the occupiers of houses and shops who have been rated for three years to the relief of the poor. Two assessors for each ward, and two auditors, were elected annually on March 1st by and out of the burgesses; and the council appoint a town-clerk, treasurer, and other officers on November 9th. The total number of borough magistrates was seven.

1534 Lawlessness in Wales

Juries failed to convict the local powerful magnates either out of fear or because they were bribed. Many of the more major criminals were friendly or related to the local magnates witness Sir John Perrott, the town authorities and the pirates living in Quay St. Haverfordwest. Murder went unpunished except by the Council of Wales the magnates would force the local population to pay the magnates fines.

Henry authorised Rowland Lee, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield (although a Clergyman, he had never preached) to stop the crime in the Marches of Wales. He was a man who had little love for the Welsh and was appointed President of the Council for Wales with power to order executions and he is reputed to have had 5,000 people hanged in his six years as President

Henry VIII backed him with a series of laws:-

- 1] Juries suspected of giving false verdicts were to be severely punished by the Council
- 2] no night time crossing of the River Severn was permitted (this was to stop cattle raiding)
- 3] No one was to carry arms and arthel (befriending criminals) and commorthas (gatherings at which collections were made to pay the fines of local magnates) were forbidden
- 4] All offenders escaping from a lordship had to be returned.
- 5] Marcher lords' officials were to be tried by the Council if they wrongfully imprisoned or fined people.
- 6] Crimes committed in the Marches could be tried in the nearest English county

This was followed by the Act of Union

1535 ACT OF UNION, S. 17.and relevant Acts

That the Lordships, Towns, Parishes, Commotes, Hundreds and Cantreds of Haverfordwest, Kilgarran, Lansteffan, Laugherne otherwise called Tallaugherne, Walwyns Castle, Dlewysland, Lanwehaden, Lanfey, Herberth, Slebeche, RosMarket, Castellan and Landofleure, in the said country of Wales, and every of them shall be united annexed and joined to and with the County of Pembroke.

Union was brought about in three stages

An Act which said that eight JPs were to be appointed in each Welsh shire. The English legal requirement of £20 a year income did not apply. Shires were to be divided into Hundreds fitting the old commotal areas of administration.

An Act was for "Laws and Justice to be Ministered in Wales in like form as it is in this Realm"

This was designed to make Wales part of England. It abolished the rights and privileges of the Marcher lords and ordered that English law be applied. Welsh men could then stand for Parliament, but were only allowed to hold office in Wales if they could speak English. Two Commissions of Inquiry were appointed.

One to fix boundaries and one to consider whether to keep any of the Laws of Hywel Dda

...

In the rural deanery of Pembroke there were 41 parishes all told. Within this deanery were some of the best benefices in the county Carew (£43) Tenby (£26) and Narberth (£25). In all there were 12 parishes worth more £10 a year. Of these only two had a resident Parson in 1534 and they were two of the least valuable Begelly (£12) and Bosheston (£11)

1538 Official attacks on shrines and places of pilgrimage

An Act giving the Council of Wales and the Marches wide powers over Wales and the Bordering English Counties of Herefordshire, Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, Shropshire and Chester.

It had powers to hear all criminal cases brought to it by poor people who couldn't afford to go to common law courts, it tried serious offences and heard appeals from lower courts which it was responsible for supervising. This was abolished in 1641

Court of Great Sessions was established to take place twice a year for six days at a time in every shire, presided by the assize judges.

Quarter Sessions were to be held by the new JP's

County Courts were to be held by the sheriffs monthly and also Hundred Courts for minor matters every fifteen days.

Sheriffs position was downgraded they were in future only allowed to hold office for one year and were under the control of the JP's they also were put in charge of county goals

Bailiffs were reduced to supervising executions, pillories and whippings
Constables of the peace were appointed in each hundred under the control of the JP's.
This new system of courts lasted until 1830.

The JP had to take oaths of supremacy and allegiance, recognizing the Monarch as head of the country and of the Church, they were also required to supervise inns, regulate alehouses, maintain bridges, apply regulations on weights, and deal with vagrants and later under Queen Mary to supervise the maintenance of roads. During Elizabeth's 1st reign the administration of the Poor Laws including poor relief, the regulation of manual workers wages and the establishment and management of houses of correction which provided compulsory work for the unemployed.

Act passed in 1530 to deal with an "alarming" increase in robberies and theft

"Any person, being whole and mighty in body and able to labour, found begging or being vagrant and giving no satisfactory account of how he or she lawfully obtained his or her living" could be arrested by a constable. A JP could have him or her stripped naked, tied to a cart and whipped "till his or her body should be bloody". The vagrants then had to swear to return to their birth place or where they had lived for the last three years and there "labour as a true man ought to do".

1554 Arrest on Suspicion

Before this date JP's could only arrest people on definite charges

After they could arrest people on suspicion and interrogate them for three days then if need be commit them for trial. At these felony examinations the person who arrested the accused as well as those who had accused him had to appear. If the JP felt the accused had a case to answer, he noted "the examination of the said prisoner and information of them that bring him of the fact and the circumstances thereof for certification to the next gaol delivery" He then bound the accusers to give evidence at the trial and committed the accused to prison. If two JP's were present the prisoner could be granted bail.

Offenders committing Misdemeanours (drunkenness and brawling for exmple) could be dealt with "summarily" (without a full trial) by a single JP, often in the JP's own house.

1555 Upkeep of the roads

Responsibility for the upkeep of the roads fell on the parishes. Each parishioner was supposed to give four days labour (later increased to 6) towards the maintenance of the roads. - The Act was not rigidly enforced. This state of affairs existed until the setting up of the Turnpike Trusts by Acts of Parliament which were really private companies that built, improved and maintained roads and could charge travellers tolls for using them

1572 Act for the Punishment of Vagabonds and for the relief of the poor and impotent (helpless) started:

"Where all parts....of England and Wales be presently with rogues, vagabonds and sturdy beggars exceedingly pestered, by means whereof daily happeneth.... horrible murders, thefts and other great outrages.... be it enacted [that any over 14 years old] be brought before one of the justices of the peace.... and be presently committed to the common gaol.... there to remain.... until the next sessions of the peace or general gaol delivery"

Anyone then found guilty was whipped and burned through the "grisle" of the right ear with an inch thick "hot iron".

JP's had to compile a register of the "poor, aged and impotent" and then tax the community to raise money to care for them. They were to appoint overseers of the poor to specialise in poor relief.

1576 Act instructed JP's to buy work materials and provide "houses of correction " in which vagabonds were to be "strictly kept as well in diet as in work, and also punished from time to time"

1595 onward

The importance of Pembroke subsequently to the abolition of the palatinate depending principally upon its Castle, which, after the events of the civil war, was never re-fortified and left to decay. There was a further decline, owing to its remote situation and want of commerce; and though it nominally retained its dignity as the capital of the county, it dwindled into comparative insignificance, as all the substantial benefits arising from that distinction were transferred to Haverfordwest, which, from its more central situation, was found better adapted for the transaction of the business of the shire.

The export of cloth from the area had virtually ceased and George Owen laments "The trade of clothing used in tymes past in this countrey ys now utterly neglected, whereby thousands were mayntayned" Owen estimated that twice as much wool was shorn in Pembrokeshire as forty years previous but was sold unwrought acc/t tradition the woollen manufacturing in west Wales declined in the 16c due to an epidemic of "the sweating sickness".

1545 63 Acc/to George Owen Pembroke "Very ruinous and much decayed" with an estimated population of about 630

[1615-15.] John Phillipps of llanvernagh,, To the right honourable Ralph, Lord eure, Lord president and Lord lieutenant of the county of Pembroke.

As well in his own behalf as in the behalf of the rest of the inhabitants and freeholders of the said county [your petitioner] did prefer a former petition to your hand in the name of himself and others, the freeholders of the said county, against the justices of peace and treasurers of the said county for exacting and taking into their hands several sums of money amounting to great value, and for not employing of the same to the special uses for which the same were Levied, collected and appointed. Viz.

The sum of £200 towards the house of correction, which was never made nor any person put on work therein.

And £40 yearly towards the relief of maimed soldiers where there are but two maimed in the said county which are allowed only but £11 per annum.

And £12 yearly Levied for the relief of persons where there is but £6 employed. And also for levying of the sum of 20 marks imposed upon the whole county towards the repairing a little bridge called St. Katherine's Bridge, which should have been repaired by the next two parishes adjoining and not by the whole county.

And for the raising and levying of divers other sums of money for the supposed repairing of divers other decayed bridges within the said county, and converting the moneys to their own uses. And not employing of the same according to the true purpose, intent and meaning of the decrees taken and the Laws of this realm ordained for the true and due use and employment of the same.

Which grievances, with the said petition enclosed, were by your lordship in your honour's letters recommended unto the deputy lieutenants and others of the justices of the peace of the said county, requiring them duly to examine the matter and to take order therein and to make due certificate thereof to your lordship. Which letters your petitioner did deliver according to the direction of the same. And in respect there was some doubt made that your petitioner did prefer the said petition without the privity or consent of the rest of the inhabitants of the said county, the petitioner has brought certificate under divers persons' hands of the said county purporting their consent thereunto.

The petitioner now sheweth that Thomas Canon, esquire, one of the deputy leutenants of the said county, doth demand £32 of the country for his travail and expenses in [purchasing?] of the mises imposed upon the inhabitants of the said country, and therefore humbly prays respite of the payment of the same until order be taken for the payment of the said moneys remaining, not employed and spent by the treasurers.

And that Sir James Bowen, knight, now appointed by the whole county indifferent to be treasurer and receive the moneys not employed and remaining in the hands of the said former treasurers, and out of the same to make satisfaction to the said Mr. Cannon and to account to the said county for so much as shall remain in his hands not employed. And withal sheweth that one Mr. Swynnew has a pension of 20 marks by colour of having been a maimed soldier, who was apparent to be hurt in the said county and not in His Majesty's service, and therefore prays a suspension of his pension till the matter shall be further examined before your honour.

1650 February 22 Act for the better propogation and preaching of the Gospel in Wales 71 commissioners appointed most of them prominent Parliamentary supporters to investigate complaints against the Clergy and to eject those whom they considered unfit. Amongst the Commissioners appointed were Sir Erasmus Philipps of Picton Castle and Samual Lort of Stackpole Court

(196 Clergy deprived of their living in South Wales within 3 years offences included pluralism, ignorance, drunkenness, keeping an alehouse, or supporting the King. A group of 25 Approvers were appointed to select "godly and painful men" to fill the vacant livings but they found the task well nigh impossible and a system of "itinerate" preachers was forced upon them).

The Act also attempted to establish a national system of schools. The approvers were charged with appointing suitable schoolmasters 63 new schools were opened in the Market towns of Wales where children of both sexes were taught to read and write and count without paying fees.

Having received your order of the date of the 15th of June 1652 concerning the regulating of Markets enclosed in a letter from Mr. Blakgrave, we according to the contents thereof have caused the same to be openly published at the public sessions holden for the county of Pembrocke at the town Hall of Pembrocke the fifth day of this instant October, the which we certify as is desired. And further we make bold to make known unto you such places within the said county as we conceive fit where Markets may be directed viz. Monnton in the hundred of Castlemartyn on Tuesday, Fishgard in the hundred of Kemes on Wednesday, Lawhadden in the hundred of Dungleddy on Thursday, St. Florence in the hundred of Castlemartyn on Thursday, and Narberth in the hundred of Narberth on Wednesday. And the reason of our certificate to you herein is for that there is not any Market in the county but in the two corporate towns of Pembrok and Tenby and the county town of Haverfordwest.

1. If the assessments be any way to be moderated, we refer the poverty of this place to your consideration.
2. If possible that we may have the hamlets within the several parishes of St. Thomas 's and St. Martin's to contribute to the assessments within the liberties.
3. We desire to have the post office to this town if it may be obtained, for since its being at Pembroke it has been both inconvenient and incommodious to us, paying above treble post from Pembroke hither.
4. That we may purchase the excise of our own ale and beer, paying more for it than is paid by the farmers [deleted].
5. Having already in this place made progress into a trade of manufacture, we humbly crave assistance how to raise stock for the predicting of it the effects whereof will be to the unspeakable good of the town and country in general.
6. If there be occasion for securing of arms we desire that the mayor and common council may have the keeping of them and not exposed to irresponsible hands.
7. That we may have a barrister for our recorder and assistant to the mayor.
8. We desire you to find a book of later acts and ordinances for the use of the town.

Francis Meyrick to Mr. George Garrett.

To defraud or to contest with my Lord, far be that thought from me. It pleased you, being my Lord's agent, at your last being in the country, to suffer me to continue tenant to those lands and tenements which I held that time of his lordship, not cutting down any timber or selling any furze from off the land, paying the rent and tithe of my corn as formerly I did. I confess I ploughed up two acres in the wood wheoin there has not been sown these forty years and upward any corn, and I had part of the East Close in the parish of Pernbrocke called St, Maries in corn also, for which I paid no tithe, nor did I formerly in regard it was part of the priory demesnes, and in my weak judgment if I had paid the tithe I should have brought the priory demeses to have paid tithe wool, lambs, cheese and Hay to the minister of the two parishes, which has not been paid in any man's memory, and so consequently have prejudiced my Lord or his tenant who shall hereafter hold it, but rather than I will incur his lordship's displeasure I shall be willing to give his lordship any reasonable satisfaction.

Sir, you know I pay a great rent for Boughwood, which is as much as any man will give unless it be one that will hold the plough himself, I have been at a great charge on it. It is a bare, open place, neither succour for young cattle or sheep without the wood, and I have no encouragement either to manure, hedge or build on it, having no term, so that if yon please to use the means whereby a lease of three lives a one and seventy years on it with the wood may be procured from his lordship, I shall not be unmindful nor ungrateful to you for your love and favour herein. William Holcombe TO Mr. George Garrett at IPSWICH,

I have written unto Mr. Browne as concerning his rent and have desired him to pay it into the hands of Mr. John Acrode and take his receipt. I did speak with Mr. Richard Brown's brother and did cause him to make fine in Mouncton House. On Tuesday last Mr, Hinton kept court in Mouncton for my honourable Lord and there I caused a new jury to be formed and had five of the old jury sworn as Witnesses concerning that piece of land which Mr. John Lort caused to be ploughed and claimed it to be his brother's land called by the name of my lords Court, which the jury brought to be my Lord's when you were here and do continue in what they said and say plainly that it is my Lord's land and was ever so, to which the new jury have assented unto and have given it under their hands, which you shall receive by the next. I have not yet received any more rents.

Sir, I am presented by the mayor of the town of Pembroke for the repairing of the chancels of the two churches of Pembroke, which must be repaired. Sir, I desire your advice. Worthy Sir, if you think it convenient I shall wait on you and my Lord at London as concerning my father's business when you shall think fit.

This work, Mr. Browne thinks, will cost him about £250.

William Holcombe TO Mr. Georg Garrett at IPSWICH.

I thought fit to write unto you now in regard I fear my letters do miscarry by the post. Sir, as for my Lord's rents, I have received them and should be very glad to give an account for the same, but if you think fit I shall gladly wait on you and my honourable Lord about the last of April to pass my account and shall then bring up my Lord's rents that will be due at Lady day next, if you please to give order, and should then gladly take a lease of our house if you think fit.

Sir, as for Moun-ton farm, I suppose Mr. Browne will not hold it, for he was telling me that my Lord did intend to come here himself, but that is not likely. Mr. Strasy the victualer has a desire to take it, but what he will give I cannot tell. But if you please my father and myself will give as much as any man alive shall, but I shall protest unto you Mr. Browne has much worn it and ploughed it so that there is not one foot of meadow on it. Yet nevertheless you and I shall not differ for I shall leave all things to yourself, for I deal truly with you. I desire to be my Lord's servant and your's for I [word omitted] there is no man in Walse that can make more of it than my father can. Therefore if you please I shall take it and give my honourable Lord £50 per annum. But the first year I desire there may be some abatement made of it so that we may not exceed the rent that Mr. Browne now gives, and every year after I shall be willing to give £50 per annum. Mr. Brown told me that my honourable Lord told him that his tenant Holcombe proffered £50 per annum for it: therefore I am loth, and so is my father, if I should be worse than my word, always provided that we may have the wood with it that Captain Meyricke holds.

I have glazed the west chancel of Pembroke, but for the other Church I shall not meddle with that till further order, for that will cost at least £10 to be done sufficiently, but it may be made to serve three or four years better cheap. Mr. Bywater will not be reformed, and what to do for a minister I cannot tell.

Thomas Beede TO Mr. George Garrett In London,

It's the desire of your poor friend to be my Lord viscount's tenant for St. Daniells lot of tithe. I pray you, being his agent, to give order to Mr. William Holcombe, your friend and mine, that I may have some years upon it. Although the rate is raised double by it was formerly,

It will not be amiss for the landlord to be at a certainty, let tillage increase or decrease, or let the price of corn be cheap or dear. Subscribed : If you possibly abate of £17, which was the rate I gave last year, it will be well. If not I am contented in regard of the great necessity I have for straw yearly, my tillage being but little.

1674 September 12. Pembroke.

John Powell To Mr. Thomas Lemon At Sir Robert Clayton And John Morris esquire's House In Ye Old Jury London.

In my last I gave an account of my uncle George Powell's indisposition of health and my desire to you of using your interest in procuring an assurance of his employment (which is comptroller of the customs in the Port of Milford and members) in case he should do otherwise than well; and fearing lest my former might miscarry by reason I have received no answer from you, and my uncle continuing weak, I have presumed to trouble you with this, requesting your favour to confer with Mr. Phillip Lloyd belonging to the Treasury Office, whom I think most meet to be solicited, or with any with whom you have an interest, to get a fiat from my Lord Treasurer whereby the said place of comptroller may be assured to me, and I shall (in case my uncle should decease) on the procuring the patent in my name give £100. Pray use your interest with all expedition and I shall not be wanting to gratify you for your trouble herein, and what charge you are out shall be thankfully repaid. My service to Mr. Morris, to whom I thought it presumption to write, yet if you think convenient be pleased to desire his assistance in my behalf, assuring you that none shall be readier to serve either him or yourself unto his capacity than your assured friend to serve you.

Subscribed : My uncle George Powell presents his humble service to Sir Robert Clayton and Mr. Morris, to whom at present he is not in a condition to write, but has taken care to even all accounts in case he should decease.

ELECTIONS Pembroke

1702 April 4. Pembrock.

Haverfordwest Corporation MS. 421.

Slebech MS. 5609.

From 'The Mayor And Diverse Burgesses Of Ye Ancient Borough Of Wiston' To The House Of Commons.

[Petition] heweth

That the said borough of Wiston is an ancient borough by prescription and hath divers franchises and privileges belonging thereunto.

That the mayor and burgesses thereof share a right together with the mayor and burgesses of Pembroke and the liberties thereof and the mayor and burgesses of Tenby and the liberties thereof in the said county of Pembroke to vote at the election of a burgess to serve in Parliament for the said borough of Pembroke, and ought to have public notice given them of the time appointed for every such election, which right they have frequently exercised without interruption and notice has been given to them by the mayor of Pembroke for the time being in order thereunto.

That Sir Arthur Owen, baronet, with an intent to gain the government of the said borough of Pembroke wholly into his own hands, in the year 1704 procured himself to be elected a mayor of the said town of Pembroke although by the charters of the said borough of Pembroke he was not qualified so to be, and by reason of the said election and some pretended new election continued to serve the said office of mayor for two years successively although he was not (as your petitioners are advised) legally admitted thereunto, during which time the said Sir Arthur Owen admitted and swore great numbers of his dependants, tenants and servants who did not live within the liberties of the said borough of Pembroke, to be common councilmen and burgesses of the said borough, contrary to the charters and bye-laws of the said borough, thereby intending to bring the election of burgesses to serve in Parliament for the said borough and the return thereof wholly into his own power, and deprive your petitioners as well as the other legal electors of their rights of election or having any share therein.

That the better to effect this unjust design, the said Sir Arthur Owen has procured divers of his dependants of mean fortune, who were no householders in the said town, to be elected mayors thereof, who have in an irregular manner admitted and given great numbers of the dependants, tenants and servants of the said Sir. Arthur Owen who did not live within the liberties of the borough of Pembroke to be burgesses of the said borough, and the election for a member for the present parliament for the said borough drawing on, Joseph Rickson, the present mayor thereof, solicited on the behalf of the said Sir Arthur Owen to procure him to be elected burgess to serve in this present parliament for the said borough, and afterward proceeded to the said election without giving unto the said borough of Wiston such notice thereof as by law is required, and your petitioners and divers other burgesses of Wiston resorting to the said town of Pembroke to be present at and vote at the said election were in a riotous and tumultuous manner menaced and insulted by the said Sir Arthur Owen, his dependants, servants and agents. And your petitioners having at the said election offered themselves to vote for Lewis Wogan esq., who stood a candidate at the said election, were denied by the said mayor so to do, who alleged that the burgesses of the borough of Wiston had no right to vote at the said election, by means whereof and other undue practices of the said Sir Arthur Owen his agents, and servants, the said Sir Arthur Owen procured himself to be elected and returned burgess to serve in Parliament for the said borough of Pembroke, and your petitioners and divers others having a right to vote in the said election and excluded therefrom are in danger of losing that great privilege for ever unless relieved by your hands.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray your honours to take the premises into your consideration and grant the petitioners such relief therein as to your honours shall seem just. And your petitioners shall ever pray [un finished.]

1714/15 February 14. Pembroke.

J. Barlow TO AN UNKNOWN RECIPIENT.

Yesterday the election for this place came on. Sir George and the brigadier were candidates, but before the election was preceded to Sir George desired one Mr. Owen and myself to go to the mayor and the brigadier and to endeavour to come to some method and agreement as to polling the burgesses, which was at last agreed to and was as follows.

That they would first poll only the old burgesses of Pembroke which were made before the contest between Mr. Wogan and Sir Arthur Owen, and then proceed to those of Tenby of the same date, and after they would poll fifty of the burgesses of Pembroke and as many of Tenby made since, and would take those of Wiston amongst them till they had polled them all. This method was pretty well observed till all those old burgesses were polled out, and the mayor proceeded to the fifty of each borough and first he polled fifty of Pembroke, who all to a man voted for the brigadier, being occasionally made for that purpose, but when Sir George demanded the like number to be polled for him of Tenby the mayor demanded to see the town books of Tenby that he might be satisfied that they were legally admitted. The town clerk attended with a list of the burgesses, which he offered to make oath was a true copy from the town books and alleged that neither the mayor nor himself could justify the carrying them out of the Corporation, but that would not be allowed off by the mayor by reason, he said, that was not a satisfaction to him that they were legally admitted. Upon this I demanded of him to show me what he required as a legal admittance to prove them burgesses that had had been polled for the brigadier, but he said he would not give me that satisfaction, that he was judge of the poll, and since he was satisfied that they were he was not obliged to give it anyone else, and notwithstanding we offered in case he would give us time to send for the town books he should have them produced, but he absolutely refused unless they had copies of their admission with them, and so closed the books and returned the brigadier.

I had almost forgotten to tell your lordship that I demanded of him to poll the old Wiston burgesses that were allowed by the House of Commons at the former contest, and several of them being in the Hall demanded their right to be polled, but could not obtain it. Upon this we proceeded to poll them all as we did formerly in the Castle Green, by which Sir George has a great majority, but I must tell your lordship that most of those new burgesses of Pembroke were made to outnumber our Wiston burgesses, and abundance of new ones at Tenby by Sir George to equal those made at Pembroke for the Brigadier. The numbers of each side was so great as to amount to a thousand men. Sir George is resolved to petition, but has designed first to beg your lordship's advice, as also to send you a copy of his petition. Our country election comes on St Davids day at this place, and they threaten me in the same manner, but I defy them to have anything like a majority.

Pembroke 1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Acc to Lewis

The town is beautifully situated on an elevated ridge projecting into the head of the Pennar Mouth Pill, forming the largest southern creek of Milford Haven. It divides the creek into two branches, by which, at high water, it is nearly insulated, and over each of which is a neat bridge of stone. It consists principally of one Long street, irregularly built, connected on the west with the ancient village of Monkton, which forms a suburb to the town, and on the north with a new street leading to Pembroke Dock, a flourishing and populous place, about two miles to the north-west, within the parish of St. Mary , forming a distinct town, which has arisen since the removal of the dockyard thither from Milford.

The houses are built on both sides of the ridge, of which the western extremity is crowned with the magnificent ruins of the Castle; and on each side are gardens sloping down from the houses to the water's edge. The embattled walls with which ancient Pembroke was surrounded are still tolerably perfect on the north side, and the town, rising above the waters of the broad inlet, amidst some of the richest scenery in this part of the principality, has an air, in some aspects, of venerable grandeur, and in others of picturesque beauty. The Streets are partially paved and lighted, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with excellent water from seven public conduits in different parts of the town, to which it is conveyed from a distance of half a mile, by means of pipes laid down at the expense of the Corporation. Exclusively of Pembroke-Dock and the village of Monkton, the town contains about 2000 inhabitants, partly included in St. Mary's parish, and partly in St. Michael's.

There are no particular manufactures carried on at Pembroke, the inhabitants consisting of persons of small Independent fortune, shop-keepers, and a few whose business is at the dock; but it serves in a great measure as a depôt for the neighbouring districts. Stone-coal is brought from a distance of about six miles to the east of it, and bituminous coal from Swansea, Llanelly, Newport, and other towns on the southern coast. When colonial produce was not permitted to be imported into Ireland direct, it was lodged in warehouses appropriated to the purpose at Pembroke Ferry, in the parish of St. Mary ; but that place is at present of no commercial importance. The Market, which is abundantly supplied with provisions of every kind, is on Saturday. There are fairs held annually on April 12th, Trinity -Monday, July 10th, October 10th, and November 30th; and in the suburb of Monkton, on May 4th and September 25th.

The borough, in addition to the towns of Pembroke and Pembroke-Dock, comprises a considerable agricultural district. The parish of St. Mary is surrounded by the parishes of St. Michael, Cosheston, and Monkton, and is computed to contain about 2000 acres, of which nearly 1600 are meadow and pasture, and 400 arable: the soil is of a reddish colour, and indifferent quality, except a line of limestone which passes through it; and there is little timber of any kind. St. Michael's is bounded by the parishes of St. Mary, Nash, Cosheston, Lamphey, and St. Petrox, and is calculated to comprise about 1800 acres, of which nearly 1400 are meadow and pasture, and 400 arable: there is little timber, and the soil is of much the same character as that of St. Mary's, but rather better; a line of limestone, also, runs from east to west through the parish, and there are a few small quarries. The parish of St. Nicholas', or Monkton, comprising a village or suburb within the limits of the borough, and a rural district in the hundred of Castlemartin, is noticed under its own head.

Pembroke Castle

In the town of Pembroke, Pembrokeshire, south Wales massive Castle begun about 1190 on site of earlier earth and palisade fort built in 1093 when Arnulf de Montgomery built a simple "fortress of stakes and turf" cutting of the headland which later became the inner ward of the Castle Twice before 1100 Welsh attacks on the Castle failed.

1102 Montgomeries disgaced.

For a time the home of Princess Nest princess of Dyfed who owned Carew Castle was reputed to be very beautiful she married twice was also mistress to Henry 1 and Cadwgan the prince of Powis and had children from all these liaisons.

Great keep among finest circular keep in Britain

Henry VII tower reputed birthplace of the King in 1456 beneath part of Castle natural cavern Wogan's cave

The site of Pembroke is almost perfect for fortification of its date and type. A substantial tidal creek, opening out of the main waters of Milford Haven at Pennar Mouth, here divides into what were originally two tidal arms, everywhere wide enough to act as a substantial obstacle, and running nearly parallel to one another for upwards of half a mile, at which point they are still only about a Furlong apart.

Neither is now tidal; that on the north (the Mill Pond) has Long been dammed up at the mill-weir under the site of the North Gate. This permanently tideless portion has been extended to the fork of the creeks by the recently constructed barrage below the Castle. The southern arm, Monkton Pill, has been dried up by draining and tipping, and now forms a length of fairly dry ground.

The narrow ridge, slanting down to the water on each side, made an excellent site for a substantial medieval town, with the Castle at its extreme point. but to complete the perfection of the position, this point forms a fairly level rocky platform, decidedly higher than the body of the ridge in its vicinity, and protected from it by considerable falls of ground on the south and east (in part at least artificially scarped), so that the only practical approach is along the crest of the ridge and up a fairly steep slope to the south-east angle of the Castle. Finally, the greater part of the perimeter overlooks the two creeks and their junction, and these sides are high, steep, and rocky; on the northern half of the circuit they form cliffs which need virtually no artificial defence, and carry, indeed, little more than a breastwork. The platform is about 500 ft. long by 350 ft. wide, a very convenient size for a fairly large medieval Castle.

It has been suggested that so fine a defensive site was fortified in earlier ages, but this notion rests on nothing but conjecture.

As distinct from fortification, simple occupation during the Roman period is attested by the finding of a fair number of

Roman coins;

Mr Cobb in particular testifies to having discovered nine personally apparently in the Wogan cavern.

The actual history of the Castle opens with Domesday Book, which discovers the great Earl Roger of Montgomery firmly entrenched on the upper Severn. It seems that he was already poised for a thrust south-westwards into Dyfed, for immediately upon the death in 1093 of Rhys ap Tewdwr, the effective ruler of the area, he undertook this surprising March over the backbone of Wales, and it seems that he at once occupied the splendid site of Pembroke, as if he had already found out that it existed. It was conferred on his son Arnulf de Montgomery.

In the course of the Welsh reaction against the Norman invasion—which began in 1094, only a very short time after Earl Roger's conquest of Dyfed—all the Anglo-Norman castles in the south-west were lost, with the single exception of Pembroke. The Welsh, indeed, never succeeded in capturing it, and its great strength went far towards depriving it of any military history.

This brings us to the very arguable question of the eleventh-century siege. If it occurred at all, a very likely time for it would be just those months of 1094 when the Norman's lost so many castles; but there is also a passage in the Brut y Tyrysogyon, which could place it in the year 1096. This reads like an account of a successful cattle-raid rather than a siege; the Castle itself clearly cannot have been pillaged, as it was never taken. Nor does the detailed and very readable narrative in Giraldus Cambrensis' Itinerary, (composed nearly a century after the event) give us much help; his chronology in general is very faulty. His typically vivid anecdotes of the siege are almost certainly pure invention, though we need not doubt that he is right in describing the newly-founded Castle as ex virgis et cespite, tenue satis et exile [constructum] .

The downfall of the house of Montgomery in 1102, following the war between Henry I and Robert of Belleme, involved Arnulf losing Pembroke; the King took it into his hands and entrusted Dyfed and the Castle to a knight called Saer. In 1105 Saer was dismissed from office and replaced by Gerald of Windsor. There follows a fairly Long blank period in the history of the Castle. The chronicles have virtually nothing to say about it, and no part of the fabric can be ascribed to a date before the last years of the century.

The great house of Clare, a Norman family whose principal abode came to be the great Castle of Clare in Suffolk, achieved fame and importance in the British Isles from Leinster in Ireland to Tonbridge in Kent. In 1110 Gilbert Fitz Richard of that family conquered Ceredigion in 1117 he was succeeded by his son Richard who was killed in an ambush set by the men of Gwent in 1136,15 and in 1138 Richard's brother Gilbert, commonly known as 'Strongbow', was created Earl of Pembroke by King Stephen. His son Richard, also called Strongbow, succeeded to the earldom on Gilbert's death in 1148. The invasion of Ireland by Earl Richard and other Anglo-Norman barons in 1169-70 was an event of the first importance in the history of Pembroke Castle, though the earl himself did not live Long enough to make any changes in its structure to discharge its new function; he spent the last few years of his life in Ireland. In the course of his adventures, the extreme importance of Pembroke was indicated in an unexpected fashion when Henry II decided to visit Ireland, his main purpose being to assert his position as overlord particularly over the Anglo-Norman adventurers. On both the outward and the homeward journey he passed through Pembroke.

In 1176, Richard Strongbow died leaving two young children: another Gilbert, who died before reaching manhood, and Isabel, who in was married to the great William Marshal. The Marshal thus became earl.

It may be said at least that he was the greatest of the earls of Pembroke; indeed he was probably the greatest lay subject of our Middle Ages. What concerns us more closely is that the earliest masonry of the Castle is certainly his work, and that virtually the whole of the defences appears to have been completed by him or by his sons, the last of whom died in 1245.

Down to 1170, Pembroke formed a remote extremity of the property of any of its lords, with nothing beyond it save the Irish Sea. Nor was the county a very large area; it occupied only the south-western part of the county of Pembroke of modern times. With Ceredigion in Welsh hands it was an isolated outpost of no great importance, and its lords were inclined to style themselves earls of Striguil, after their great March -holding of Nether Gwent. Now things were very different. With his wife's enormous inheritance to which were later added his own family lands and the lordship of Goodrich, the Marshall was a very rich man indeed; and very much the largest, and possibly the most valuable part of his property lay across the Irish Sea, in the form of the vast fief of Leinster: five modern counties and part of a sixth, held by the service of 100 knights. The St. George's Channel passage became very important; the Marshall himself made several crossings, his officers and messengers a great many. Pembroke, at the eastern end of this passage, increased enormously in importance, and the great masonry works undertaken in this period were needed for its defence. What had been there before ? Was it still the slender fortress of stakes and turf of the days of Gerald of Windsor, or a wall of unmortared stone, here on the lime stone where splendid mortar was ready to hand? There is no means of saying; but at best the defences, some traces of which may yet be revealed by excavation, were so slight that they were destroyed to make room for the walls and towers of the post-1189 period. Nothing seems to have been incorporated in the later works.

In the thirty years of the Marshal's rule (1189-1219) there was one interruption of royal authority, between 1207 (when the earl, going to Leinster against the will of King John, was obliged to surrender to the King all his castles in England and Wales) and in 1211, when the King received the Marshal back into favour; it is unlikely that much work was then going on at Pembroke or elsewhere among the earl's castles.

On the death of the earl in 1219, he was succeeded in the lordship by five childless sons: William the younger (died 1231), Richard (murdered at the Curragh in 1234), Gilbert (killed in a riding accident in 1291), and Walter and Anselm both of whom died in 1245. 'Thus ended the male line of the Marshals without a single heir. In contrast to the earl's five daughters, who, all had families a genealogical freak which the more superstitious of contemporary opinion was inclined to ascribe to Albinus O'Maelmuidhe, Bishop of Ferns, who had had a dispute with the great Marshal over some Irish lands. Getting no satisfaction either in the earl's lifetime or after his death, Albinus cursed the family. The vast patrimony of the Marshals was divided among the numerous relatives of their numerous sisters. The lordship of Leinster ceased to exist. The earls of Pembroke ceased to guide the fortunes of the March. And for Pembroke Castle there were notable times to come; but the great days were gone beyond recall, for ever. The partition of the Marshal lands left Pembroke separated even from Haverfordwest, and Wexford severed from the bulk of Leinster; with Goodrich, these made up the share of the youngest sister, Joan.

Joan Marshal after the death of her father had married a wealthy baron, Warin de Munchensy, and died in or before 1234, when Warin married Denise (Dionysia) de Ancsty. By Joan he had two children, John and another Joan, by Denise a son and eventual heir, William.' Probably because his first wife had never enjoyed her share under the partition, Warin did not obtain the normal life-tenancy of a surviving husband 'by the courtesy of England', and Joan's share passed directly to her children. John de Munchensy died in 1247, during the actual process of partition, and his sister Joan married William de Valence, half brother to Henry III, and carried her mother's share to her husband.

William de Valence was perhaps the most unpopular of the foreign relatives of the King at the time of the Barons' War. In 1264, in the time of Montfortian supremacy, all his lands in the county of Pembroke were committed to the custody of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, and it is significant that it was 'in the parts of Pembroke' that John de Warenne and William de Valence landed in 1265 to renew the struggle.

William and Joan de Valence were never formally created earl and countess, though by inconsistent contemporary usage they were often given these titles. William seems to have made Pembroke his main seat of power; his involvement in local matters, his foundation of Tenby Hospital, and his activity in Edward I's South Welsh army (which he commanded in 1282) all suggest a deep interest in Pembroke. He died in 1296; Joan outlived him for eleven years; in 1307 their only surviving son, Aymer, succeeded to the title and vast estates of his parents, adding eventually those of the Munchensy family. Unlike his father, he had preoccupation's which will have kept him from giving much attention to Pembroke, since he was involved to a major extent in the nightmare of national politics under Edward II as well as in the Scottish wars; but he was able to unite Haverfordwest to the lordship, re-creating something like the great county of Pembroke which the Marshal earls had ruled.

Aymer de Valence died childless in 1324 and his estates were divided between the descendants of his two sisters. The elder, Isabel, had married John de Hastings, Lord of Abergavenny, and accordingly the title of earl passed to this family, along with the Castle. In fact it was Isabel's grandson Laurence who became the first Hastings Earl of Pembroke, succeeding to the title in 1325 at about the age of six. From the time he was recognised as of age in 1339 until his death in 1348 he was continuously and gloriously involved in the first phases of the Hundred Years' War. The second earl, John, was only a year old when his father died; he did homage and had livery of his estates in 1368, and from the next year followed his father's path in the wars of France. But in June 1372 he was in command of the English fleet at the disastrous battle of La Rochelle; the Castilians were completely victorious, his fleet was destroyed and he himself taken prisoner. After three years in captivity, he died in suspicious circumstances on the way home. His only son, another, John, was born in 1372 and was killed in a jousting accident in 1389 at the age of 17, so that he never held the name of earl nor the estates of his father. On his death the title became extinct and the Castle passed into the hands of the Crown. .

By this time the fabric might be expected to be out of repair; the Marshals and William de Valence were resident lords to whom the Castle was a principal dwelling and a major seat of influence; Joan and Alymer de Valence are likely to have kept it up, if not to have embarked on much new work, but as early as 1331 the Crown found it necessary to undertake repairs to the roofs of the Prison Tower, the Chapel, the house where the County Court was held and other buildings, and new hinges for the wicket of the prison. The Hastings earls, well either they inherited a minors or they were involved in the 100 year war. Thus they had been unable to maintain the Castle properly. In the invasion scare of 1377 a survey was ordered 'on information that many defects in the Castle of Pembroke are threatening through lack of good keeping and repair, to the great peril of the loss thereof and of the parts adjacent if any peril of hostile attack arise'; in addition, the Castle was said to be neither garrisoned nor victual. On 2 July the garrison recently put in, under a Welsh knight, Degary Seys, and consisting of 19 other men-at-arms and 20 archers, was ordered to be doubled, the new contingent to be under Jolun Joce, knight; in fact, Degary eventually found himself in command of an impressive force of two other knights, 67 sergeants-at-arms and 70 archers. The scare once over, the Castle was neglected once more, and worse than neglected. In 1386 a commission on the decays and damage to the lordship of Pembroke reported a most deplorable state of affairs. The Castle of Pembroke in particular had suffered damage to the amount of some £250. All the sections of the report end monotonously: 'all which destruction's and damages took place during the custody of the said William Beauchamp, by himself and his ministers, to the manifest contempt and prejudice of our Lord the King'. The very large sums of money set aside against decay of posts beams and spars in the Hall and its adjacent chambers through defective roofing suggest forcibly that William de Beauchamp or his ministers had stripping the lead from the roofs. After this it is depressing to have to record that on the death of the young John de Hastings in 1389 the Castle was committed to William de Beauchamp.

The Castle was now Crown property, and the subject of short-lived grants not a favourable situation from the point of view of upkeep. In 1390 it was farmed out to John Golafre, knight, for live, and in 1399 to William de Beauchamp, Lord of Abergavenny. In 1403, Henry IV, with Beauchamp's assent, granted the castles and lordships of Pembroke, Tenby and Cilgerran, with the commote of Oestrelowe (Ystlwyf) to Francis Court, knight, and Joan his wife and the heirs male of their bodies at a rent of 100 marks yearly. This was not a comfortable gift; in the first years of the Lancastrian era even so defensible a holding as Francis and Joan received in Wales would have been no bed of roses, when the earlier troubles which followed the downfall of Richard II became a formidable national revolt under Owain Glyndwr. As early as 1400 orders were issued for the safe custody of this and other castles; in 1403 came a warning of imminent attack and a commission of array to withstand it. In the crisis-year 1405, when the French sent an expedition to Milford Haven,; Court was given munitions: 16 crossbows, three thousand quarrels, 50 pounds of gunpowder and 50 pounds of saltpetre (evidently he had guns already) . About that time, Thomas Roche , the constable of the Castle fell into the hands of the rebels. The times were certainly hard, but at least there was a resident Lord, and the Castle must have been kept in some sort of defensible order. Francis Court saw the war through, and died in 1413, leaving no heir by his marriage to Joan, whereupon Henry V granted Pembroke, Tenby, Cilgerran and Ystlwyf to his own youngest brother Humphrey, who was next year created duke of Gloucester and Earl of Pembroke.

It seems probable that Duke Humphrey a fighter in the wars of France, turbulent and unlucky politician, patron of learning and the arts, founder of a lordly Library was very much of an absentee Lord. Pembroke formed part of his property when he died without heirs of his body in 1447. This contingency had been foreseen in 1443, when a reversionary grant of the familiar group of lordships of Pembroke, Tenby, Cilgerran, with the commote of Ystlwyf, to which were added Treynne (the hilly area towards the western part of the St Clears Lordship) and St. Clear's, was made to William de la Pole, earl of Suffolk and Alice his wife, and in 1443 Suffolk was raised to the rank of duke, and received all these estates, with the addition of Llanstephan.

From this point onwards, the grantees of the Pembroke title and estates were mostly dogged by an evil fortune. Suffolk, in particular, after his serious mismanagement of the wars of France, fell from power in 1450, and was exiled from the realm, only to be intercepted and beheaded by pirates, probably in the pay of his enemies. Though he had never been attainted, his title was treated as extinct.

The next Earl of Pembroke, Jasper `Tudor, received the county, Castle and lordship in 1454, During his tenure of the earldom occurred the most famous incident in the history of the Castle, the birth to the very young widow Lady Margaret Beaufort of a posthumous heir to her husband Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond and brother of Jasper- an heir later to be known as Henry VII After the Yorkist triumph in 1461, earl Jasper was accounted `a rebel', and William Herbert was commissioned to seize the county of Pembroke and all his other possessions; on 3rd February 1462, the same William Herbert was granted the Castle, town and lordship of Pembroke (a grant on 12th August in the same year to Richard duke of Gloucester, brother of King Edward IV and afterwards King Richard III, seems never to have taken effect). William Herbert, the first earl of that name, was created earl in 1468, only be beheaded after the battle of Banbury in the next year. His son, another William Herbert, was only about 14 at the time of his father's death

In 1482, the young earl exchanged the earldom and title with Edward, Prince of Wales and thus the Castle returned to the Crown in the person of its most hapless representative, Edward V. During his tenure of the Principality, there was some work undertaken, mainly on the roofs His uncle and supplanter, Richard III, had little better fortune as King; but in his hopeless struggle to preserve his throne, the Castle of Pembroke played its part. As early as 1483 the treasurer of Pembroke was ordered to pay £100 for the stuff of the Castle, and 20 marks (£13 6s. 8d.) for other small things to be purveyed there. Clearly this was the victualling and stores for a garrison. About the same time the chamberlain of Carmarthen was ordered to pay to one Richard Newton the sum of £113 14s.6d. for his expenses incurred on the Castle of Pembroke; and in 1484 the Castle's firewood was ordered to be supplied from the forest of Narberth. In the same year the offices of constable and steward of Pembroke constable of Tenby, chief forester of Coydrath, constable and steward of Cilgerran, and steward of Llanstephan;, were granted to Richard Williams, one of the ushers of the King's chamber, for life, on the condition of his executing the office of constable of Pembroke Castle in person

Much more than this was necessary, of course, to prevent an invasion; but it is worth notice that when Henry Tudor, Earl of Richmond, came to Milford Haven in August 1485 he gave Pembroke a wide berth, landing on the far side of the estuary at Dale and so proceeding by way of Haverfordwest, through Cardiganshire and along the Severn to Shrewsbury, and ultimately to Bosworth and victory. By the end of the year Jasper Tudor had been restored to his earldom, which he retained until his death without heirs in 1495. He was the last Earl of Pembroke of the old style, a great Lord Marcher ruling his March with jura regalia, independent of the crown for local purposes. Loyalists of the first generation, like Earl Jasper and Sir Rhys ap Thomas, were acceptable to the Tudor Monarchy in the role of mighty subjects, but nobody else was permitted to take that place for Long. Over a brief four years, 1532-6, the ill-fated Queen Anne Boleyn was Marchioness of Pembroke. When William Herbert, grandson of the first earl of that name, was created earl in 1551, he received only a title of honour; the lands, revenues and whatever jurisdiction may have survived being retained in the hands of the Crown or the Principality of Wales,

The change was undoubtedly prejudicial to the survival of the Castle. already its military significance was diminishing in face of the advance in artillery, and its useful function in Tudor Wales was becoming questionable. The tale of its decline can mainly be traced by circumstantial evidence only. It seems likely that the fabric was in fairly good condition at the end of the fifteenth century. The emergency occupations by Court in the time of Glyndwr and by Richard William's in 1484-5 would be times for putting the place in repair. We have the record of some government expenditure, and Jasper Tudor and William Herbert, both Welshmen, are likely to have been in residence comparatively often. It would appear that even a tower-room in the outer ward was adequate for the bedchamber of Earl Jasper's sister-in-law.

Leland was here in about 1538, and gives a curious description of the Castle :

The Castel standith hard by the Waul on a hard Rolke, and is veri larg and strong, being doble wardid. In the utter Ward I saw the Chaumbre wher King; Henri the VII was borne, He also said that the Hogan was a vaulted chamber underneath the keep and that the keep was capped by a mill stone

John Leland the Antiquary was a scholar of the very highest class; but as regards the inner ward, he is mistaken: the Hogan (Wogan) is a natural cave, not a vault; its entrance is not at the bottom of the Keep, but about 100 ft. away, in the front wall of the Hall; finally, there is no sign of any millstone ever having been used to close the top of the domed vault of the Keep. The obvious explanation is that he was dependent on unreliable second-hand information, and that while on his own account he was admitted to the outer ward, he was not allowed into the inner. Even his informants were vague as to its details.

Without considering the arrangements of the Castle in detail at this stage, it must be pointed out that the inner ward is small and compact, and contains numerous buildings; the outer ward, occupying the remainder of the natural feature, is very large indeed, without trace of any habital quarters, except the chambers in the Great Gatehouse and the towers. It would be natural, during the gradual decay of such a Castle, to abandon the large and costly outer enclosure first. Perhaps that is what had happened here.

1563, when the Castle was still in the hands of the Crown, the decay of the Outer Ward had gone further; there was a lease of 'the utter grene: in the precinct of the Castle' presumably for pasture or even cultivation.

Finally, by 1595, we reach what appears to be the end of the road, local leaders including the local antiquary, George Owen of Henllys, , wrote to Henry Herbert, Earl of Pembroke and others

1595 November 8. Carmarthen.

Anthony Menevensis, John Wogan, George Owen, Frannces Meyrike and Albane Stepneth To Sir John Puckering, Lord Keeper, Lord Burghley, Lord Treasurer, The Earl Of Essex, Lord Buckhurst, And The Earl Of Pembroke.

The bounden duty we owe to Her Majesty, the conscience we have for the safeguard of the whole realm, and the care that in nature and reason we carry of this our country have emboldened us to offer this discourse unto your honour concerning the safety of them and us all.

It becomes us not to fear, neither do we doubt of the wise and grave consideration that your lordship and the rest of the lords of Her Majesty's most honourable privy council have had and still have for preservation of Her Majesty and the realm, but yet fearing your want of due information touching the estate of Milford Haven and the adjoining parts, it may please you to understand that the Haven itself, being neither barred to hinder entry nor to be embayed by any winds to let issuing forth, is a sufficient harbour for an infinite number of ships, which Haven being once got by the enemy may draw on such fortification at Pembroke town and Castle, standing upon a main rock and upon a creek of the Haven, and the town and Castle of Tynby with other places near unto them, as infinite numbers of men and great expense of treasure will hardly in a Long time remove the enemy, during which time Her Majesty shall lose a fertile country which yields Her Majesty £1,200 by year and more in revenue paid to Her Majesty s receiver besides all other receipts both temporal and ecclesiastical, as tenths and subsidies etc.

Also it is to be remembered that the soil near the said Haven yields corn in such abundance as would suffice to maintain a great army and the sea coasts near about it yield great plenty of fish. The Haven also stands very commodiously to receive victuals from France, Brittany or Spain, all which things may be an occasion to move the enemy to attack that place before others.

Also there are in PenBrockesheere eighteen castles of which though there be but two or three in repair, yet are the rest places of great strength and easily to be fortified by the enemy, some of which are so seated naturally for strength as they seem impregnable. Also there are in that shire to be seen in sundry parts thereof divers sconces or forts of earth raised in great height with great ramparts and ditches, to the number of 120 or 140, which in times past have been places of strength in time of wars, all which castles and forts would yield great advantage to the enemies to strengthen themselves in such sort that it would be an infinite charge to remove them from thence.

Again, the same is situate within seven hours' sailing to Waterford and Wexford in Ireland, so as if the enemy have an intention to invade Ireland (as by report we have heard he has), his harbour in this Haven may serve him to great purpose.

Furthermore, being Lord as it were of these seas by possessing the Haven, what spoil he may make along Severne in both sides even to Bristowe may be easily conjectured. And if he, which God forbid, should enjoy Brittany withal, our English merchants can have no trade, which will decrease Her Highness's customs and decay the navy.

If it be thought that he may be kept from landing, neither the force of men nor furniture here will serve the turn, considering 'here be many places where he may easily land and he may come upon us within half a day's sailing, we having no ships at sea to descry him sooner, and how then our small forces may be in readiness to withstand him we refer to your 'honour's judgement.

If it be thought that Her Majesty's navy royal be able to conquer them being once in this Haven, and that by them fortified, it would; be found very hard by reason that upon a very little storm for want of any other harbour or bay to abide in they should be in great danger of wreck, and no land forces are able to expel them. Whereupon we humbly pray your lordship to consider whether it be not expedient for the withstanding of the enemy that he obtain not this harbour, to have a convenient number of ships of war and fortifications to defend the same, which preparation if the enemy might perceive we believe verily it would alter his mind from adventuring his navy upon this coast.

And whereas of late Mr. Pawl Ivy was sent hither to survey the Haven and to consider of fit places for fortifications, what report he has made of his opinion we know not, but sure we are that his abode about that service was very short and his survey very speedily dispatched, so that because none of us were privy to his intent or conceit we do yet retain some hope that if some other men of experience were sent down hither to consider of all the said circumstances some such report would happily be made unto your honour and the rest as some better event might ensue for the safety of this poor country and the whole realm than for aught we know has been determined upon, especially if the party shall have instruction to view the town and Castle of Tynbye, being a place which may be easily made of exceeding strength and was not seen by Mr. Ivy nearer than two miles distance for aught that we can learn.

Thus having, we hope, discharged the duties of true and faithful subjects we humbly commit your good lordship and all your grave consayles to the blessed protection and direction of Almighty God. Subscribed :

Four several letters verbatim was sent to the Lord Keeper, the Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Essex, the Lord Buckhurst, and a copy hereof enclosed in a letter to my Lord of PenBrocke, all sent by Mr. Robert Davy, esquire, Receiver of South Wales, to be delivered to their lordships.

Copy.

Of Pembroke they wrote

All the Castle walles are standing verye stronge without any decay only the roofes and leades have been taken downe . . . This town and Castle thus lying upon the said branch of Milford being unfortified as yet nowe remayneth is thought very: perilous . . .

In the Civil Wars of the 1640's, Pembroke played a very distinctive part; but it must be emphasised that in the initial stages the Castle was never defended separately and merely formed part of the perimeter of the fortress, a part against which a formal assault would have been madness, and even a surprise attack stood no chance of success.

At Pembroke neither Cromwell nor his army added much to their reputation. As far as can be made out, they were confronted with nothing more than a town wall of medieval character; they were veteran troops, and the defenders had little hope of relief. Nevertheless, the siege dragged on week after week, from 22 May to 11 July, 1648, with Cromwell directing to his Masters a series of despatches of the most deluded optimism, each one forecasting the collapse of the defence in the next few days. At length on 1 July the siege-train arrived, but even then the defenders held out for another ten days, and yielded on terms which were extremely favourable,

After the siege (but at a date which cannot be more closely identified) the fortifications were slighted. This was done moderately, level archaic fortresses with the ground.) The eastern part of the town walls has almost entirely disappeared; at the Castle the method employed seems to have been to fire a charge of powder in the basement of the towers between Northgate and Westgate, inclusive of both. The faces of these towers were more or less effectively blown out, except at the Tower, where it was the back wall gave way, leaving the tower shaken, but complete. At the same time, most of the parapets on the landward wall as those on points of vantage: like the Keep and the Great Hall seem had their merlons knocked off.

From that time to this, we are dealing with a ruin; but unfortunately we have to wait till the 1800's before there are records that I could find.

There is an old illustration by the Buck brothers who travelled round the Country producing illustrations of the towns and Castles in the early 1700's 1790 A guide book of the 1790 does have an illustration of the Castle but as the text for the whole county is covered in one and a half pages, the Castle description is very brief.

Lewis in his Topographical Dictionary 1839 gives a description in his day.

“The majestic and venerable remains of the ancient Castle occupy the western extremity of the elevated ridge on which the town is built, and are justly regarded as among the most picturesque and magnificent ruins in the country. The entire fortress was surrounded by a lofty embattled wall, protected by numerous bastions, and having only one entrance from the land, through a grand gateway defended by two circular towers of prodigious strength, and a barbican. On this side it had likewise a dry moat, and the enclosed area was divided into an inner and outer ward, the former of which comprised the state apartments and the latter the inferior buildings and offices for use of the garrison. The principal remains consist of this grand entrance, the state apartments occupying the northern side, and the keep, which last is in the inner court a massive and lofty round tower, 75 feet high, 163 feet in circumference at the base, and gradually diminishing in diameter towards the top, which is covered by a vaulted roof. This tower is divided into five stages; the walls are seventeen feet in thickness at the base and fourteen feet thick at the summit. In the inner court besides the keep, is a suite of apartments, apparently of later date than the rest of the Castle, extending over the cavern called the Wogan, or Hogan, by corruption of the Welsh word Ogov, signifying “a cave”. This subterraneous chamber is seventy five feet in length and fifty nine feet wide and communicates with the upper part of the Castle by a staircase and with the harbour below by a sally port.

The rock on which the Castle is built is forty feet high and is almost insulated by the two branches of the estuary, into which it projects, and which is navigable to the town; underneath the southeastern bastion is a natural opening in it, of unknown extent. The great solidity of the walls, and its commanding position, must have rendered this fortress all but impregnable against any hostile attempt. Its ponderous towers, with the northern suite of state apartments rising above the embattled walls, and part of the platform and parapet, which are still remaining, give its present ruins an air of venerable grandeur; and the ivy and other parasitical plants with which the ruins are overspread contribute to heighten the picturesque beauty of their appearance. Leyland says, he was shown an apartment in one of the gateway towers in which he was informed Henry VII was born; but other writers refer that circumstance to a room in the inner court of the Castle.

Pembroke Castle is now the property of the crown and is held under a lease granted in the reign of James II”

1880-83 the Castle was in the hands of, J. R. Cobb, He conducted a certain amount of restoration, particularly at the Gate,

1922 RCAM Report:-

The architectural description of Pembroke Castle has been strangely neglected by the professed students of antiquity. Neither King nor Clark has recorded the impression made upon him by the great fortress, nor does anything in their printed works show that they had paid the place a visit. Prior to 1883 brief references to one of the greatest military monuments in Great Britain were to be found only in a few desultory paragraphs in the journals of learned societies, or in local or general guide books.

The first satisfactory effort at a scientific explanation of the history and development of the Castle appeared on Archaeological Cambrensis for that year (series iv vol 14 p196) [NB despite that Association visiting the area in 1852 thirty years previously]. The writer was Mr J R Cobb F.S.A[Fellows of the Society of Antiquaries] a gentleman who, having a few years previously obtained a lease of the premises expended much time and money in a careful examination of the fortress. As Mr Cobb was thus afforded an opportunity of acquiring unique knowledge of the constructive details of the Castle, and as he proved himself to be a thoroughly competent observer, we have drawn extensively upon his account of the ruins which he did so much to preserve.

Mr Cobb observes:--

The Castle now consists of a building rising from the beach of the Pembroke River, where it is about 25 feet from the high water Mark, enclosing a cavern in the limestone cliff, and various chambers above it from which a wall of enceinte, having angle towers (for the most part shattered) and entrance towers on the south extends along the cliff top on each side enclosing nearly 4 acres, having a circumference of about 1,450 feet, with a domed round tower on the west side of the centre; the whole occupying a promontory at the west end of the main street of the town, bounded by the Pembroke river and Monkton Pill on three sides, and divided into two unequal wards by a ruined wall. It will, however at once be seen that the whole is merely the western end of the almond shaped area enclosed by the town walls, although shut off from it. The Castle area is naturally divided into two parts; the enceinte of that nearest the town being formed and regular, the other irregular, and following the contour of the cliff.

As respects the cavern as part of a fortress, Pembroke stands alone; with the exception of its north front it seems wholly natural. Chepstow has a faint artificial resemblance to it probably fulfilling the same end; but there is no other instance: and though there are many other round donjons, there is no one like this.

It should be born in mind that, owing to the absence from public records of later works of local history all of the early surveys or descriptions of the town and Castle as well as to the havoc wrought to the structure by Cromwell's artillery, many of the different buildings have utterly vanished, so that little remained to Mr Cobb that provided accurate data.

We have been fortunate in discovering amongst the manuscripts of the British Museum a volume of sketch plans of the principle defensive posts of the kingdom, made by a French artist in the year 1650, one of which is a plan of the Castle and town of Pembroke. This enables us to correct some of the errors into which Mr Cobb has unavoidably fallen, and in which he has involved later writers who have touched upon the Castle. The plan of the town inset on Speed's map of the county should also be consulted and a photograph of the town taken from the air shows how little its essential characteristics have altered in the meantime.

The important features of Pembroke, those whose purpose and position have been governed by the character and conformation of the ground, and in their turn have influenced the arrangements of the other parts of the general scheme, are the great round tower or keep, and the spacious natural cavern called the Hogan or Wogan; the existence of the latter unquestionably led to the placing of the great Hall immediately above it, as at once ensuring for the principal apartment a safe mode of ingress and egress to and from the Castle, and complete immunity from damp.

The Chapel probably occupied the story above the Hall exhibiting much of the same plan as at that adopted in the earlier part of Carew; the other residential and business chambers were grouped around it in the north-eastern angle of the Castle enclosure, though the unbroken and Long continued use of the Castle as a residence and administrative centre doubtless led to changes in their uses and fittings.

On the keep Mr Hamilton Thompson observes:-

The introduction of the cylindrical donjon coincides with a period at which the keep was already beginning to disappear from the Castle. The principal examples, which may be attributed to the early years of the 13th century, are on the frontier and in the south of Wales. Chief among them is the fine tower of Pembroke, which was probably built by William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke and Strguil, about 1200. The Castle of Pembroke was of great importance, owing to its situation upon an arm of Milford Haven [NB: It stands on a promontory between two creeks at the head of the inlet known as the Pembroke River], and its command of the passage to Ireland. The keep was probably the first completed portion of the present Castle, the stone work of which, as it stands today, is very largely of the late 12th and early 13th century. [NB: The domestic buildings may be in part earlier, but were largely reconstructed in the 13th century]. It is a round tower with a basement and three upper floors standing just within, but not touching, the curtain which divided the inner and higher from the outer ward. The height is 75feet; the floors were of wood, but the uppermost stage was vaulted by a dome, which remains, rising in the centre of the tower above the ramp walk. The stair is a vice in the west wall, from the basement to the summit: the main entrance was upon the first floor, but there is also a basement entrance which seems to have been pierced not Long after the building of the tower. The whole structure batters upwards and the walls are slightly gathered in each stage on the outside – a method the reverse of that pursued at Conisbrough: The masonry is rough-coursed rubble. On each of the first and second floors there is towards the inner ward , a two-light window with pointed openings, the spandrels between which and the enclosed arch are pierced with plate tracery. The third floor was lighted by windows pierced in the dome. {NB: The tower is sometimes described as being of five storeys: the dome however was merely a vault and did not form a separate stage]

Commanding as it does, the whole interior of the Castle, this tower is remarkably grand in situation: and its thick walls offer considerable resistance to artillery. It shows, however no advance upon the defence of Conisbrough. The rampart walk is narrow, and the dome in the centre prevents the employment of the roof as a platform. (Mil. Architecture in England and Wales during the Middle ages p 179)

The keep, the nucleus of the late 12th century Castle of Pembroke, was enclosed within a strong curtain wall that was carried along the crest of a partly natural drop in the rock that stretched across the little peninsula, and which was artificially deepened so as to form an almost impassable ditch in front of practically the whole length of the curtain from Monckton Pill on the western side of the headland to the Pembroke brook on the northern. This enceinte wall has a slightly bowed out course, which was strengthened at intervals by two partly engaged towers and also by a strong square tower at each terminal, this effectually guarding the approach from the two streams. The second tower in this dividing wall between the inner and outer wards, counting from the western end of the curtain had become so complete a ruin that its existence was not suspected until Mr Cobb brought to light its foundations. Notwithstanding that it was found to be deficient in most of the features of a gateway Mr Cobb regarded this as an entrance to the Castle courtyard. The identification was inherently improbable, and happily , the French plan shows that the entrance was between the tower at the eastern end of the curtain and the tower called by Mr Cobb(and shown on Mr wall's plan as) the Prison tower. The details of this gateway have so entirely disappeared that the Long tunnel like space through which entrance was obtained was taken by Mr Cobb to be the site of the original, or (as he terms it) the old Norman Hall notwithstanding that the site immediately to the north of the gateway is accepted by all authorities as that of the great Hall of the Castle, and coeval (or nearly so) with the keep.

Finally, to deal with the remaining buildings of the original Castle, the sole buildings on the western side of the courtyard are two chambers standing side by side, though not structurally connected. One of these was taken by Mr Cobb to be the Chapel, and the adjacent chamber , the priest's lodging. Seeing that the Chapel would thus be separated from the residential part of the Castle by the whole breadth of the courtyard, the suggestion is not a likely one. The original purpose of these buildings is not easily grasped, but it is possible that one of them may be the chamber in which the future Henry VII, the nephew of Jasper Earl of Pembroke was born. It is true that Leland says that this chamber was "in the outer ward" but as both rooms are built practically on the line of the curtain, the southern chamber might very well have been taken as falling within the outer ward. The rest of the courtyard was bare of buildings.

There can be little doubt that the buildings within the cross curtain wall constitute the original Castle of Pembroke , and they date from the commencement of the 13th century, though materially modified and added to at several later periods

Of the cavern, which was evidently considered to be an important adjunct to the Castle, Mr Wall writes as follows:--

It is clearly an artificial enlargement and union of some natural spaces in the limestone rock to which a strong face wall, having in it a wide and high gateway was built. The chamber measures over 80ft from north to south and over 60 ft from east to west. Over the gateway there appears to have been a recess 10 ft high and over 6ft wide with a stone seat round it. It is surmised that these openings were approached by a wooden stair and platform. The rocky shore opposite the gateway was cleared so as to form a Quay against which small vessels could lie to discharge or take in cargo. When the buildings above were roofed and guttered this cavern formed a fairly dry storehouse for heavy goods, and also probably served the purpose of a boathouse. It will be noticed that the stair was closed at the bottom, as well as at the top, by a strong door. (Guide to Pembroke Castle p 17) About a century later, probably during the tenure of William de Valence (died 1296) the modern town of Pembroke was established and surrounded by a stout wall with towers at intervals. Most of these towers have been destroyed but Barnard's tower at the north eastern Angle a scheduled ancient monument is up for disposal. Due to economic reasons the County Council are unable to continue to care for it and has identified it as surplus to requirements and sold.

1923 ,

Major--General Sir Ivor Philipps acquired the Castle, and commenced on clearance of ivy and vegetation.

1959

The Castle is the property of trustees to whom Mrs Basil Ramsden, daughter of Sir Ivor Philipps, conveyed it in 1959.

Finds Coins Roman

(i) Roman. while excavating at Pembroke Castle, in 1887 , Mr. J. R. Cobb found a coin of Carausius, which had been used to fit a blade of some kind to a handle. With it were a Constantine, a Constantine II, a Constans and two uncertain issues

(ii) In 1835 a small copper coin of the reign of Constantine, in excellent preservation, was found on a rock: near Pembroke Castle (Ms. in the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society).

(iii) A series of gold, silver and copper coins found at Pembroke was exhibited to the Cambrian Archaeological Association at its meeting at Tenby in 1851

No trace of this collection now exists.

Acc/to Journal 1885 Vol XLI of the Congress of British Archeological Society they visited the site of the Castle on September 8 1884 and met a Mr J. R. Cobb of Brecon who was restoring the Castle.

Roman ?

" That the site was occupied by the Romans may be assumed from the numerous coins of Constantine and Carausius collected. Mr Cobb had found several. No Roman bricks or tiles however have been found"

Bronze ornament found in Pembroke Castle February .-

Mr. A. G. O. Mathias sends us particulars and a photograph of the small bronze ornament here which he recently picked up in Pembroke Castle. General Sir Ivor , K.C.B., the present owner, is, we understand, carrying out a considerable reparation work in connection with the Castle. In levelling the ground outer ward not far from the great gate-house and the central tower, he found walls and buildings, showing chambers with their doorways, a cobble pavement, two spiral staircases, and a latrine with its cesspit have been brought to light. Amongst the refuse from the cesspit the small bronze was found. It bears the shape of the head and shoulders of a dog. Mr. Reginald A. Smith, Keeper of the Department of British and Mediaeval Antiquities, at the British Museum, to whom it was submitted, wrote; " Your bronze has been gilt and enamelled in three colours (two shades of blue and red}, and dates from the thirteenth century, coming from Limoges or the Meuse district. I hesitate to name the species but it seems to be part of the decoration of a casket or shrine."

The bronze was in the possession of Sir Ivor Phillips.

[was this an early Cannon ? The cost if it was just an ordinary pot was very great.- (and copper was being mined in the area at the time) -- an English manuscript of 1326 by William de Millimete (there is a note in BIRUNGUCCIO referring to this illustration at Oxford – contacted Dr Martin Kauffmann - The Bodlian , broadstreet, Oxford OX1 3BG.)shows an illustration of what is described as "fire pots or iron pots" was this a Brass one ? --- They were cast using the same techniques as that used by the Bell makers and first appear in England between 1321 and 1326. The illustration depicts a large bottle shaped pot which appear to have fired a missile in the shape of a Ball pierced by an arrow. Acc/to Mike Eastham there appears in VANUCCI BIRUNGUCCIO: PIROTECHNIA written on the 1540's a description of the process of casting bronze guns as used in 1540, This process differs little from the techniques described for Bell founding by Theophilus (On Divers Arts (12c MS Vienna Nat Bob 2527, 13c MS BM Harley 3915 and Egerton 840 Cambridge Univ Lib MS 1131) Trans Hawthorne and Smith , Dover N.Y 1963)In June 1338 the French fleet which raided Southampton was furnished with one " Pot de Fer", 3lb of gunpowder [consisting of 4 parts SaltPetre, one part Sulphur and one part Charcoal] and forty eight large bolts with iron "feathers" in two boxes, these were fire arrows and sometimes called " garrots" The use of these missiles was soon superseded by the use of stone and iron balls.. A bill for purchase for some of these " Pot de Fer" for the defence of Cambrai in 1339 shows that they were purchased by weight and that the total weight was, when cast in iron, 25lbs per gun. There is evidence that the English had three Cannon at the battle of Crecy in 1346 said to have been carried slung below the baggage wagons] and on the site of the battle five balls roughly of 3in dia, three of iron and two of stone have been found in the part where it is reputed that the Genoese crossbowmen were halted by the fire of the English archers and our "Three Cannon" The copper/bronze guns cast in 1353 for Edward III by William of Aldgate cost 13s 4d each to make.]

one coffer	(2s)

twelve pairs of guns (parea gynorum) with one iron chain (13s?)

[Guns first recorded about this time but did not become common until around 1350, they were in general use by 1400. The earliest handguns consisted of a barrel attached to a wooden or metal pole and were ignited with a piece of smouldering tinder held in the free hand ---a picture illustrating Froissart's(died 1410) chronicle of the Hundred Year War in the Bodleian Library shows a hand gun being used] [Acc/to Funcken Handguns were found under a variety of names and developed among the lower rank of troops spread from Italy to Germany then into Flanders from where mercenaries were hired by the King of England in 1314. It had an enormous advantage over the bow and crossbow in that it did not require any special care or maintenance it could be manufactured in half a day and was much cheaper. (An English document of 1353 quoted by them claims the cost of a large crossbow was 66s and of a small bore barrel 3s. Lead bullets could be cast at the rate of 12 per minute. Range was only 50 metres but it could pierce a suit of armour at 20 metres]

Cannon

Until c1670 the word Cannon was applied only to special types of guns - Very large artillery pieces - the smallest of which the demi-Cannon weighed 6,000 lbs and fired a shot of 28-30 lbs

Gunpowder - introduced into Europe in the first decade of the 14c. There is little doubt that after 1325 "Cannon" existed all over western Europe and they were certainly used by the English under Edward III at Crecy although they were regarded as inefficient (what affect did they have on the horses)

Missiles - originally in the shape of a spear somewhat like a harpoon - later shaped stones and later still iron balls were employed.

The Guns were mostly made of cast bronze or brass - it was not until c15 that wrought iron was used. The original cast iron ones were inclined to burst when fired.

Early hand Cannon - used in Europe C14 - the early Cannon hand Cannon were small enough to be handled by one man but had to be aimed with one hand and fired with the other so hitting a moving target was very difficult.

Ballistae - giant crossbow type of engine in which the bow arms were generally levers held in vertical torsion coils one on either side of the projectile.

Catapults - used a single torsion powered arm that rose from the horizontal to the vertical to discharge a projectile held either in a cavity at the end of the arm or in a sling attached to it. Also referred to as Mangonels or Onagers

Springle - a single springy arm mounted rigidly in a vertical position. when the top of this arm was pulled back towards the horizontal it could be used to cast stones or impart forward velocity to arrows with strong heavy butts struck by the arm at the end of its free return.

Trebuchet - in general use in the Middle ages.- used gravity to propel a missile - by means of a tapered beam pivoted near the heavy end having a heavy weight attached to the heavy end. The slender end being pulled down the weighted end is raised, upon release by means of a trigger mechanism the weight falls jerking up the slender arm throwing the projectile which had been placed in the scooped out pocket at the slender end of the arm -- range - could be hundreds of yards - missiles -rocks, inflammable mixtures or dead animals (Mongol army said to have used the dead bodies of plague victims in 1334 as missiles when besieging a city).]

Pembroke Town walls

The town of Pembroke still retains sections of its defences, which ran south from the Westgate Tower and east from the Northgate Tower. The northern line ran along what is now Millpond Walk. Little survives of the stretch nearer the Castle, but further along are some well-preserved sections with crenulations still visible, but blocked by the raising of the walls, when the stair ramps were built along them to give access to the town houses within. A small circular tower on the north-east was originally attached by a now broken stretch of wall to Barnard's Tower, an impressive three-storied tower with a fore building over its entrance, defended by a bridge pit, portcullis and gate. The roof dome is intact, and the whole structure with its fireplace and lavatory is a strong, almost self-contained defensive unit; this was probably necessary as it was isolated on the north-eastern end of town, almost half a mile from the Castle

The wall (inaccessible) continues south from Barnard's Tower to Eastgate which formerly stood over Main Street. The only other surviving sections are a small fragment of a tower on Goose Lane and two small round towers on the south. They stand on a rebuilt piece of town wall, and one has a late summer-house built on top. The southern town walls ran alongside a flat marsh, probably tidal in the 13th century. A fragment of Westgate survives opposite the Castle entrance. The town defences, rather thin in comparison with others, are very early and probably date to much the same time as William Marshall's late 12th-century or early 13th-century work on the Castle.

Civil War

The First Civil War

It would appear that most if not all of the action involving Pembrokeshire in the Civil Wars was concentrated in the south of the County

No record of personal bravery can be attributed to those who commanded or led for the King within the county-with the sole exception of that of John Gwyn, governor of Tenby, who paid for this dubious distinction with his life. He was, in any case, a Carmarthenshire man.

It is no less obvious that when the forces of the Parliament were confronted by a more professional soldiery under Colonel Gerard they were marked by a similar lack of determination, a deficiency minimised in their case by the greater experience and commitment of Rowland Laugharne and a few of his officers, and by the possession of defensible towns in Pembroke and Tenby, on which they could fall back. .

The Parliamentary cause was supported in Pembrokeshire principally by a group of men motivated mainly by what may be called 'anti-Popery and the experience of Ireland'. . Irish immigrants were already concentrated in that part of the county which was most vulnerable, near the chief ports, and doubts had plainly been raised in some minds about their true allegiance.

Other Prominent figures

John Wogan, in his old age, was one of two Members of Parliament for Pembrokeshire firmly associated with the Parliamentary cause. At no time did he sign any kind of declaration in favour of the King (a fact sufficient to distinguish him from almost all his fellow-gentry); his mother was Sybil, daughter of Sir Hugh Owen of Orielton; he was educated, like Sir James Perrot, at Jesus College, Oxford (as, incidentally, was Nicholas Adams); his wife was Jane Colclough of Tintern, His sons, Rowland and Thomas , served as colonel and captain, respectively, in the army of the Parliament, the latter earning a very special and in some quarters hated name as one of the regicides of 1649.

In the vicinity of and within the town of Pembroke.

Prominent families which included Parliamentary supporters where Meyrick's, Adam's, Powel's, Cheere's, Shakerlyne's, Lynche's, Marychurch of Manorbier, Cuny of Welston --- The Meyrick's fought for the Parliamentary side but not in Pembrokeshire

1635

In August, 1635, the King demanded ship money from the County of Pembroke. It was raised and the High Sheriff personally conveyed the specie to London, but was unfortunately drowned with his followers while crossing Ensham Ferry about the 1st of February 1636 and part of the money lost. Money had to be raised again to replace that lost.

1639

Presbyterians of Scotland became so aggressive that it was necessary to send an armed force to the north. This consisted of 6000 foot and a like number of horse. It was raised early in 1639, the Earl of Arundel receiving the command, the Earl of Essex being nominated Lieutenant-General. The latter according to Clarendon was "The most popular man in the kingdom, and the darling of the swordsmen." The army for service in Scotland was raised by general levy, towards which the County of Pembroke contributed 150 men. Two demonstrations were made against the Scots but not a single shot fired or a man injured on either side. On June 18th peace was signed and the armies disbanded.

1640

Charles was terribly pressed for ready money. Indeed so great were his difficulties that after a lapse of more than eleven years he summoned a Parliament to meet him on April 13, 1640. In this assembly John Wogan of Wiston represented the county. Sir John Stepney of Prendergast was elected for the Pembroke boroughs and Sir Hugh Owen of Orielton for Haverfordwest. This Parliament for once and all declared that the levying of ship money was illegal.

1641

12 May the earl of Strafford was executed and on 23 October following, the Irish of Ulster rose in revolt, claiming intent to rescue the King from his Parliament and confirming in the minds of all Puritans the suspicions they had had of Strafford's activities in Ireland and the involvement of the King in his plans. The Commons, appealed to by the King for money to strengthen Ormond's army in Ireland against the rebels, resolved to raise 8,000 men but also to select such officers for service in Ireland that they could trust. Sir John Meyrick of The Fleet, Monkton, and member for Ashton, was one of the first three chosen

January 14

The Earl of Essex informed the House of Lords that he had been commanded by the King to attend at Hampton Court in his office of Lord Chamberlain and Groom of the Stole. It was resolved by the House not to dispense with his presence, and he was bidden to inform His Majesty of their decision. The King again repeated his command and again the Lords declined to let the Earl go. A third time the King bade his Chamberlain attend and in return received a somewhat insolent resolution from both houses, "That the Earls of Essex and Holland did not disobey the King by attending to their Parliamentary duties." The King then, as was but natural, deprived the Earl of all office and command. This royal order marks the rupture between King Charles I. and the people of South Pembrokeshire. So Long as the Earl served the King they were prepared to do the same, and put up with a great deal of aggravation from the high churchmen, but now that the Earl whom they knew to be a most moderate man had broken with the King the outlook was hopeless.

18th January,

Sir Hugh Owen had laid Poyer's reports about possible French aid for the Irish rebels before the Commons, who directed that Poyer, in his capacity as mayor of Pembroke, should 'stay' ships from Ross, Wexford, Kilkenny and other ports and examine both merchants and goods thoroughly.

12 February

John Poyer, on informed Sir Hugh Owen (for transmission to the House of Commons) that since his last letter of 18 January 'there have been hundreds of poor English landed in Milford stripped by the rebels, who do increase daily. If aid be sent to the rebels it is very likely some of them may be driven or willingly will come into the river of Milford where 500 or 1000 are armed men, as I conceive, may possess themselves of the whole country, and fortify Pembroke town with the Castle and other strong places in the said county which will not so lightly be regained'.

He also asked Sir Hugh Owen to make plain to the Commons the sad disarray of the trained bands in Pembrokeshire, not two hundred of whom could be armed adequately to repel invasion, he went on: "We have not in this brave river of Milford one piece of ordnance mounted, the trained bands are not exercised, arms provided or power granted for punishing of persons refractory in this service"

Poyer, himself a Merchant trading to Ireland, was profoundly nervous about all ships coming in from that country. There were refugees from Ireland for whose relief the member for Pembroke, Sir Hugh Owen, was in February 1642 authorised to spend £100.38 and there were travellers who might not be genuine refugees, about whom John Poyer was especially concerned. Delegates from Lords and Commons together discussed the defences of Milford Haven, Long decayed; dilatorily enough, they concluded that the only defence possible at short notice lay in an adequate naval force. The vulnerability of Milford and the southern Pembrokeshire ports induced Sir Hugh Owen to be more active in the House of Commons than he had ever been before. Owen was by January 1642 authorised to formulate instructions to the mayor of Pembroke (none other than that same John Poyer) about the detention of Irish ships, their goods and the merchants aboard them as they lay in harbour. These instructions were part of Parliament's measures to counter what was announced as a Popish plot, expected to culminate in an invasion from Ireland. Magistrates were ordered to set watches, secure magazines and hold fast all fortified places.

Poyer, whose continued pressure had been instrumental in obtaining precise instructions from the Commons, co-operated with John David, mayor of Haverfordwest, in February 1642 in seizing a number of Catholics, some of them unexplainably itinerant officers from Ormond's army, and on 31 March was thanked by the House for his services.

5 March

Both Houses drew up a Militia Ordinance, nominating Lord lieutenant to command forces in the shires. A few months later the King answered this with his Commissions of Array, attempting to secure the same ground.

12 July the Commons had formed a Committee of Safety and resolved to raise an army of 10,000 men from London and its vicinity;

July 12 1642

After a Long debate, the two Houses of Parliament

“Did choose the Earl of Essex to be Captain-General of such forces as are or shall be raised for the maintenance and preservation of the Protestant religion, the King's person, the laws of the land the peace of the kingdom, the liberty and property of the subject, the rights and privileges of Parliament, and this house doth now declare that they will maintain and adhere to him the said Earl of Essex with their lives and estates in the same cause”

Lord Essex selected his tried old friend Sir John Meyrick to be President of the Council of War and Adjutant-General, or as it was then called Serjeant-Major General. Meyrick was M.P. for Newcastle-under-Lyne, nephew of old Sir Gilly Meyrick and son of Francis Meyrick of Fleet, in the parish of Monkton, Pembroke, and uncle of Colonel Rowland Laugharne of St. Bride's. Sir John was already colonel of a regiment and among those serving in it as captains are to be found the names of his father Sir Francis Meyrick and Thomas Laugharne of St. Bride's. Also serving in it were young Gilly Meyrick, and Thomas and Miles Button (Rowland Laugharne's brothers-in-law)

August 23

September 20

The King was at Shrewsbury and the men of North Wales had been summoned to his banner; in South Wales nothing had happened except the apparently bloodless surrender of Cardiff Castle to the Royalist commander, the marquis of Hertford, who had crossed the Bristol Channel from Somerset. Within the next few weeks, however, Hertford rode west to Carmarthen where

2 November,

The gentry of Pembrokeshire were summoned to meet him. Some, like Roger Lort, who was commissioned to raise a regiment for the King, obeyed with alacrity; others, like his brother Sampson, and John Eliot, followed. Sir Hugh Owen, John Wogan and Sir Richard Philipps of Picton, on the other hand, are known to have refused.

Support for the King was sufficient, nevertheless, especially with the greater numbers from Carmarthenshire, to form a Royal Association which, as winter came on, made surreptitious moves against the enemy.

One of these was Capt. Crowe's cattle raid on the lands of Lamphey Court, the home of that Major John Gunter who was known to be serving with the Parliamentary army and whose house was the property of the Earl of Essex. Where there was maintained a garrison separate from and apparently not subject to the local Parliamentary command.

John Poyer, mayor of Pembroke, put the town in a state of defence for Parliament . (Records of 1595 show that the town walls and Castle were in substantial repair though the latter was unroofed and dismantled; but as no repairs had been since that date Mayor Poyer must have expended a considerable sum of money Pembroke, which he rendered impregnable to aught but famine.

We do not know anything of John Poyer's early days, but Clarendon states

“Had from a low trade raised himself in the war to the reputation of a very diligent and stout officer, and was trusted by the Parliament with the government of the town and Castle of Pembroke” According to Carlyle he was given to brandy, and there is reason to suppose he was not particularly straightforward in money matters, he had acted as bailiff for Tenby in 1639, and a vessel belonged to him; so probably he was a Merchant.

The mayor of Pembroke was ably seconded by Rowland, son of John Laugharne of St. Bride's, who had served under the Earl of Essex as a volunteer in the Netherlands in 1614 and Rice Powell. He is spoken of as a veteran " that came from Ireland to endeavour the relief, and not like many others the destruction, of his bleeding country;" He was a soldier of fortune, and was probably that Sergeant Major Powell who served for the King under the Earl of Northumberland in Colonel Lundsford's regiment in 1640. Colonel Powell proved a great acquisition to the Pembrokeshire Roundheads.

The King's party fearing lest Tenby should follow the example set by the sister town of Pembroke, directed Richard Vaughan Earl of Carbery (the Royalist Commander-in-Chief in South Wales) to occupy the place forthwith. The fortifications of Tenby were probably in a better state of repair than those of Pembroke; at all events they were restored in 1588. The people, if we are to judge from subsequent events, were at heart Parliamentarians; however they offered no opposition to the Earl, who was a popular man and well-known in Pembrokeshire as a nephew of old Sir Gilly Meyrick

August there were two Royalist men-of-war in Milford Haven: the Fellowship of Bristol, 400 tons, 24 guns, with four captains on board; Captain Barnaby Burly, Captain Brooks, Captain Will Hazle, and Captain Richard Nelson; and the Hart frigate, Captain Nesson. The captains of the Fellowship had called together the gentlemen of the county and assured them that His Majesty had taken Bristol, and that the war was over.

They were attacked by the Roundhead Captain William Smith in the Swallow, one of the Parliamentary ships which were blockading the Irish coast. Captain Smith took the Fellowship without any loss on either side, and also captured her consort the Hart. In the frigate two men were killed, the first bloodshed in Little England. Admiral (Captain) Richard Swanley in the Leopard, with the Prosperous, the Providence, the Crescent, and a merchantman known as the Leopard then came into the Haven. Captain Swanley then determined to bombard Tenby. They opened fire on the Castle but with little effect.

“Eight ships presently rode before the town and made at least one hundred shots against the inhabitants, but one of the Milford Canon shot one of the best ships through and through, and so set the rest apacking .Whereby the good people of Tenby received no prejudice”. The design was to have besieged Tenby by land with forces from Pembroke town, but the beacons being fired, the good honest old way in times of rebellion many in Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire arose heartily to join with the noble Earl, whereby as the letter says, “Tenby was settled with thunder and lightning in despite of all the Pembrokeshire rebels.”

This ill-fated ship may have been lying off the Sker Rock-as a large gun was dredged up at this place and is now in the Tenby Museum.

Lord Carbery, Sir John Stepney, Mr Roger Lort of Stackpole, and Archdeacon Rudd of St Florence, all prominent Royalists then erected a fort near Pill Priory, strengthened the defences at Carew and Manorbier and Mr Lort put his “Strong” house at Stackpole into a state of defence.

1643 September 26

Lord Carbery went to Haverfordwest where he was welcomed by the gentry and the trained bands, the mayor and aldermen pledged never to receive a hostile garrison in the town. They also gave a large sum of money for the King.

Thus the whole of Pembrokeshire except for Pembroke supported the King

January Roche Castle was fortified by the Royalists

Ships were brought round from Bristol with ordnance and stores to fortify the Haven, a work that was undertaken by one Captain Richard Steele of Oxford (a great talker, who pretended to be an engineer).

The Bristol fleet captured the little ship which "Captain" Poyer had fitted out at his own expense with eight guns, in order that she might run to the Downs and beg aid from the Parliamentary fleet.

"The Earl of Carbery having voted that after the harbour was fortified he would plunder the town of Pembroke and the houses of the gentlemen who had adhered to that party, and that their persons should be put to death by cruel tortures". The Mayor of Pembroke they said should be put in a barrel of nails and brought to Prick's pill and from the top of a Hill should be rolled down into the sea. This report so terrified the gentlemen that they fled from their houses and hid themselves in obscure places in disguise, and sent their wives and children to Tenby where his Lordship the Earl of Carbery then lay, humbly to supplicate his Lordship to be pleased to grant them protection that their houses might not be plundered, nor their persons abused by the rude soldiery among whom there was a Rev. and aged gentlewoman, the wife of Mr. Griffith White, who had in her house (Henllan) eight sons and eight daughters, who were virgins, and four small grandchildren, in all twenty in number, with divers servants both male and female. This gentlewoman pressing his Lordship to commiserate her sad state in case her house should be plundered desired his protection, assuring his Lordship that when so ever he would be pleased to give her Husband leave to wait on him she did not doubt but that her Husband would give his Lordship ample satisfaction in all his lawful demands. His Lordship replied he would find a time to speak with her Husband but as for protection would grant her none. The gentlewoman with tears in her eyes desired his Lordship to look to her children who in point of honour he stood engaged to protect, as also the chastity of matrons and virgin which without his Lordship's protection she said must be undoubtedly violated and her family perish to which his Lordship answered with divers reproaches and some jests, that it were better her children and family should perish than that the King should want means to perfect his design. To which she said the King could not want if his Majesty would be graciously pleased to be content with what God and the Laws of the land had provided. At which his Lordship flung out of the room, leaving the gentlewoman with tears in her eyes, and so she departed to her house full of grief and pensive thoughts."

Rowland Laugharne who was in command at Pembroke sallied out with certain troopers and a few foot towards Carew. His men were dispersed (probably foraging) when the captain in command at Carew attempted to surprise Laugharne and seven troop who were with him but these latter routed their opponents, took twenty prisoners, among whom was a Lieutenant Jones, who afterwards joined the Parliamentarians.

This action was said to have been fought "between two garrisons of the enemy not much more distant from each shot." One of these must have been Carew Castle, the other the Fortified Rectory

Parliamentary Ships entered the Haven Admiral Captain Swanley in the Leopard and Vice-Admiral Captain Smith in the Swallow sailed into the Haven.

Laugharne and Poyer at once boarded the Swallow and explained the state of matters

The Royal ships from Bristol, Globe and Providence, ran under the guns of Pill fort for safety.

Laugharne borrowed hundred and fifty sailors from the Parliamentary ships and with these and his own Pembroke troopers took Stackpole with its little garrison of sixty men the owner hiding (perhaps in the cave known as Lort's Hole). Laugharne then moved on to Trefloyne, which was held for the King by Mr Thomas Bowen. Lord Carbery made sortie from Tenby to relieve him, but was driven back in confusion and lost part of his force in crossing the Marsh. Trefloyne was taken. Then it was decided to attack Pill Fort and Haverfordwest.

"Whereupon the little army, consisting of about 250 foot, half seamen, and half soldiers with 60 horsemen and a demi-culverin (fired a ball about 9 pounds) with a sacre (had a bore of 3 ½ ins shot weight about 5 lbs) and 5 small field pieces, made a resolute adventure over the water, animated and encouraged by the presence of a good hearty old gentleman, Mr John Laugharne, Colonel Laugharne's father, who had Long before left his country habitation, and with his whole family a few servants excepted betaken himself to the town of Pembroke. His interest and Fair noble carriage had always engaged unto him the affections of many in that part of the county we were set upon called Roose. It was God's will our landing was not interrupted, and our horse immediately dispersing abroad to bring in men, cattle, and other necessities to draw our carriages found the country willing and ready which so expedited the work that the demi-culverin and sacre were early in the evening planted in a hedge that within a short distance over looked the fort, and presently played effectually upon it. Hereupon 20 musketeers were placed in Stainton, a steeple seated on a Hill that over sees most of that country, and thereabouts the horse presently ranged to hinder correspondence between Pill and Haverfordwest, and took some straggling soldiers and some messengers and put them in the Church. We saw no body of the enemy till a little before night. Sir Francis Lloyd with about 60 horse and some foot descended a Hill from Johnson, but they being, as we conceived, afraid of our artillery never touched the ascent of Stainton, where our horse were drawn, but retreated to Haverford." (Simon Thelwall' a Letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons, April 1, 1644)

On the following day Pill Fort capitulated. There were taken at that place, Mr. John Barlow, Master of the Ordnance; five captains, certain inferior officers, thirteen great guns, six field carriages, 300 common soldiers, the two Bristol ships, wherein were twelve pieces of ordnance and six barrels of powder. The loss of the fort created a panic at Haverfordwest; a herd of cattle frightened by the cannonading at Pill stampeded, and these being seen by the Haverford garrison were mistaken in the gloaming for Roundhead troopers, both commanders fled. Sir Henry Vaughan, Major-General of the army ; Sir John Stepney, Knt. and Baronet, Governor of Haverfordwest ; Sir Francis Lloyd , Knt., Commander-in-Chief of the Horse; Lieutenant-Colonel Butler, High Sheriff of the County; James Martin, Captain of Horse ; Captain John Edwardess, Commissioner of Array ; Captain Hull of Bristol, and one hundred sailors disgracefully bolted. Laugharne and his men occupied Haverford on the day after the capture of Pill, and in two days "Roche Castle, a very considerable stronghold had it water, was summoned and delivered."

The Roundhead force then marched to Pembroke, and obtaining another gun proceeded to Tenby. To which place Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Butler the High Sheriff of the County had retreated with eighty men from Haverfordwest. Vice-Admiral William Smith in the Swallow, Captain Gettensby in the Prosperous, and the Crescent frigate, preceding the land force had opened fire on the town. When the latter arrived they placed their demi-Cannon on a Hill within musket shot, (Greenhill) a demi-culverin within half a musket shot, the small field pieces being set to scour the guard wings and hedges lined by the enemy ; our foot men having also drawn down, and armed hedges and a good strong house within pistol shot, and there continue in this posture, hot pelting between the small shot from Thursday two of the clock, till Saturday evening, and battered many houses in the town, but had not all this while impaired the town wall, except only the most necessary part there the great gate our only place of entrance. This gate Governor Commissary Gwynne (who in his actions show of a soldier), had strengthened with dung and rubbish. The gate was stormed and taken Commissary Gwynne was mortally wounded. Lieutenant-Colonel Butler the High Sheriff Colonel David Gwynne, Captains Lewis and Mitholl, non-commissioned officers and 300 men with their arms were taken.

Very soon after the capture of Tenby, Carew Castle surrendered to Poyer, on condition that the officers were to March out with their swords and common soldiers with their muskets, and bags and baggage

Captain Richard Swanley was sweeping the seas between Milford Haven and Ireland. He captured a troopship under the command of a Royalist, Colonel Willoughby, with about one hundred and fifty men on board bound for Bristol, and actually compelled seventy men and two women to walk the plank,

July, Colonel Gerard, a favourite of Prince Rupert and an accomplished commander, was sent to South Wales

Gerard retook Haverfordwest, then “Picton Castle, which the Parliamentarians had made a very stronghold, about twelve o'clock at night he fell on and stormed it, and mastered it in 1 hour with the loss of nine common soldiers hurt and taken, but not one officer, only Colonel Butler gentleman received a shot whereof he is now past danger. In the Castle were found three barrels 150 arms, Baronet Phillipps' son and two of his daughters a good round sum of ready money, and 12 trunks of plate besides £500 more of money. The Castle itself is very strong and in good repair” General Gerard placed a sufficient garrison and next day marched to Carew Castle near Pembroke, which was also taken, the remnant of the rebels being now driven to their last state, at Pembroke and Tenby

Gerard retook Roche Castle early in July, 1644, capturing at that place 500 oxen and sheep. He was then recalled to headquarters at Bristol

July 28 Acc to Rowland Laugharne

“The enemy's (Royalists) main body being at Haverfordwest, we drew forth out of garrisons of Pembroke and Tenby with 550 foot and 200 horse and dragoons (being the most that could be spared with security out of the towns), and two small guns and marched that day to Caneston, within five miles of Haverfordwest; there met 7 of the enemies scouts, killed one, took the other six. That day Captain Batten arrived at Milford; and by Divine ordination above our hopes, landed 150 seamen to increase our force. We kept the field until the 1st of August no enemy appearing. Then Major-General Stradling and Major-General Egerton drew forth out of Haverford with 450 horse, 1100 foot and four field guns into Colby Moor, three miles from Haverford and there put themselves in array for fight. A small part of our horse guarded on both sides with 150 musketeers charged their whole body, began the encounter about six of the clock in the afternoon, and continued very fierce and doubtful many an hour, but in the conclusion the enemies horse were totally routed, the residue of our horse fell on some part to do execution upon the foot, the other to pursue the horse speeding upon Haverford. We killed of the enemies 150, took about 700 prisoners, four guns five barrels of powder, near 800 arms, all their carriages and provisions and chased them home to their garrisons. The night then approaching we might not beset the town to keep in their horse, but drew back to the field, so that in the night the enemy deserted the town and fled leaving a garrison in the Castle. Saturday we entered the town and besieged the Castle, began our battery on Monday, but spent much ammunition to little purpose. Tuesday giving over we find the outer gate, and Scaled the walls, gained the Castle, took prisoners 120 common soldiers and near 20 commanders and officer's one piece of ordnance, 150 arms, some pillage to the soldiers besides the provision. Yesterday being the 8th of August we had a day of publique humiliation and thanks giving in Pembroke and Haverford and the League; this day we drew our force of horse and foot before Carew Castle and are drawing up our ordnance to plant them before the Castle relying upon the Lord of Heaven for a blessing, in all their actions; we bless God, we lost but two men and about sixty wounded, none mortally”.

Carew and Picton Castles respectively belonging to Sir George Carew the Royalist and Sir Richard Philipps the Roundhead, were still garrisoned by the King's men. According to the newspapers Manorbier (probably a mere shell) was also held by the Cavaliers.

Carew seem to have capitulated,

Picton stood a three weeks' siege

1645

Laugharne and his troops followed up their success and drove the Cavaliers out of the county of Carmarthen. This was accomplished in October, 1645

1646

In February , 1646, the Pembroke shire troops relieved Cardiff, and the April following captured Aberystwith Castle.

1647

January, 1647, put down a serious insurrection in Glamorganshire.

1645

Rowland Laugharne had been rewarded for his valuable services by Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament, who on the 4th of March , 1645, settled on him and his heirs the Slebech estates of John Barlow who had made himself peculiarly hateful to the Parliamentarians by his loyal service to the King under the Marquis of Worcester and Lord Glamorgan.

1645

A part of the Parliament side under Cromwell, determined to get quit of Lord Essex, who led the Presbyterians. In April, 1645, the Earl of Essex resigned his commission so all came under the command of Sir Thomas Fairfax

His resignation was accepted, but a portion of the army by no means approved. "There have been great mutinies and discontents among his (the Earl's) soldiers, in so much as they have refused to March with Sir William Waller." Among the discontents were Sir John Meyrick, who had already suffered for his loyalty to the Earl, for in 1643 he was superseded from his post of Sergeant-Major General of the Army to make way for Skippon, and was nominated General of Ordnance. Sir John sent in his resignation at the same time the Earl gave way to Fairfax, and we may be certain these matters were discussed in Pembrokeshire and had not a little to do with subsequent events that came about in that county whose course was nearly run.

On the 14th of September, 1646, Lord Essex died in Essex House, it is said, of fever brought on by over exertion in a stag Hunt at Windsor. A public funeral in Westminster Abbey was decreed for him, both Houses of Parliament attending. Sir John Meyrick carried his gorget. Lord Essex was buried in St. John Baptist's Chapel. He had taken for his second wife Elizabeth daughter of Sir William Paulet of Edington. This marriage, like the former, had ended in disaster and separation. The only child died in infancy. Sir Walter Devereux, Bart., of Castle Bromwich, succeeded as fifth Viscount Hereford, and Lady Hertford to Lamphey Court and the Pembrokeshire estate, which was shortly afterwards purchased by the Owens of Orielton, in whose possession it remained until the year 1821, when the manor passed by purchase into the hands of Charles Mathias, esq., of LlangWarren, who built the modern house.

"Master Gunter" seems to have been the last resident at Lamphey Court. During his occupation it was most likely rendered uninhabitable, for numerous Cannon balls found in the vicinity prove the old house suffered a bombardment

THE SECOND CIVIL WAR

The Royalist party had been suppressed Throughout west Wales, and a victorious triumvirate composed of Laugharne Poyer and Powell ruled Little England in the name of Parliament come about. The Presbyterian faction, to which Pembrokeshire men mostly belonged, gradually became more and more bitterly opposed to the Independents, who were represented by Cromwell and the army.

In February ,1647,the Scotch Presbyterians sold King Charles to the English Parliament for £400,000 and the Presbyterian majority in the latter body, considering that as the Royal person was now safe in the keeping of Parliament, there was no further necessity for a standing army, and that the majority should be disbanded, thus saving England from a military despotism, . But the army declined to disband and while the matter was under discussion Cornet Joyce stole the King away from Holmby House and brought him as a captive to head-quarters at Saffron Waldron.

The army remained undisbanded.

Taking advantage of these dissensions certain Royalists now in Glamorganshire ` declared for the King and Sir Thomas Fairfax'. They stated that they would be very glad to hear how Rowland Laugharne looked upon their proceedings. Laugharne forwarded the letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons declaring "I shall (God willing) never desert my first principles for the Parliament of England," and then marched on Cardiff. The insurrection melted at his approach.

It would seem from Laugharne's protestations that his good faith was doubted by the Parliamentary party as early as June, 1647. It is difficult to discover what grievance could have rankled in his mind if it was not the Presbyterian feud. He was Major-General of the District, had been rewarded with the valuable estate of Slebech and was held in high esteem by the whole Parliamentary party.

According to Claredon

"The Pembrokeshire leaders communicated their discontents to each other, and all thought themselves ill requited by the Parliament for the service they had done and that other men (especially Colonel Mytton) were preferred before them; and resolved to take the opportunity of the Scots coming in, to declare for the King upon the Presbyterian account"

Powell seems to have been a free lance that followed the fortunes of his leader without consideration, deeming it was a soldier's duty to obey.

In Poyer's case the causes of disaffection may be readily discerned. He commenced life as a Merchant, and had prospered in some trade, which he threw over, and took up first politics, then war, as a means of livelihood. His business was sacrificed and his capital squandered. To redeem the latter he availed himself of opportunities afforded by his position as Parliamentary Commissioner, and was openly accused of dishonesty by his neighbours.

On January 3,, Sir Thomas Wroth proposed in the House of Commons

“That the King should be laid by, and the Kingdom settled without him; that some other government should be formed he cared not what, so that the ruling power be neither King nor devil”.

This motion was carried by 140 against 92, and forthwith sent up to the Lords. The upper house after a protracted debate, and two adjournments adopted the motion on January 15th. Royalists and Presbyterians in England and Scotland were rebellious, and a portion of the fleet revolted.

It was in Pembrokeshire that the disaffection came to a head.

The leaders of the Independent party seem to have been kept well informed of what was passing in west Wales, for an order was forthwith given that the army of South Wales under the command of Major-General Laugharne should be disbanded, a few soldiers being retained to garrison the fortresses of Cardiff, Swansea, Carmarthen and Pembroke.

Laugharne notwithstanding his protestations is said to have been imprisoned, and Poyer was superseded in favour of Colonel Fleming.

This thoroughly roused Poyer who was threatened by some of his neighbours (probably Roger Lort of Stackpole and Griffith White of Henllan in Castlemartin) with a lawsuit for misappropriation of funds as a Commissioner. Poyer entrenched himself in Pembroke Castle which he garrisoned with a mixed force of Presbyterians and Royalists in number about 500.

Some time before March 13th Fleming occupied Pembroke town, where he awaited orders from Cromwell. When these arrived he held a council of war and sent a summons to deliver up Pembroke Castle within twelve hours, or Poyer and all with him to be proclaimed rebels.

Poyer was willing to agree subject to being paid £1000 plus his arrears of pay and the arrears of pay of his men.

Colonel Fleming offered him £200 pounds and laid down conditions regarding disbanding the forces.

Colonel Poyer answered this appeal by opening fire on the town: several houses were battered down, and eleven soldiers wounded, some mortally.

Then Colonel Fleming who appears to have been most anxious to avoid proceeding to extremities thinking perhaps it was a dread of the Lawsuit hanging over Poyer's head that rendered him desperate with the advice, and upon the desire of the gentlemen of the county “offered he should have the security of the gentlemen of the county· whom he hath much oppressed that they would relinquish all suits and actions at law against him”.

But all these offers from Colonel Fleming and the gentlemen of the county could not prevail upon Poyer. He put out his flag of defiance and would not yield.

News arrived in Pembroke that the detachment of Laugharne's men in Tenby were prepared to revolt from Parliament, but on the other hand the garrison of Carmarthen declared that neither they nor their comrades in Tenby had any sympathy with Poyer. From what followed, it would seem that this letter was intended to put Fleming off his guard, for two hundred of Laugharne's men with the cognizance of Poyer, made a forced March on Pembroke ; when near at hand Poyer, who could see them from the Castle before Fleming's men were aware of their approach, sent out instructions by a messenger. He then sallied forth and attacked Fleming in his quarters; the latter gallantly defended himself, and indeed seemed to be getting the best of the fight, but Laugharne's troopers coming up and taking him in the rear utterly routed the Parliament forces, killing and wounding many, “capturing twenty or thirty prisoners and two great culvens, with all arms and ammunition.” Laugharne's men must have entered by the east gate which no doubt was opened to them by confederates in the town. Poyer was now master of Pembroke and the surrounding district. He fortified and victualled the town in anticipation of a siege.

Captain Henry Addys, one of those of Carmarthen who had signed the false declaration, joined him with one hundred men, and he proceeded to raise foot and horse, pressing the country people, collecting arms of all sorts and provisions. He imprisoned Messrs. Sampson Lort of East Moor, Thomas Bowen of Trefloyne and David Poyer; his brother, they paid ransoms but subsequently joined the rebels.

"Hearing that two companies of foot sent from Bristol to join Fleming had landed near Pwllcrochan, Poyer sallied out with a hundred men in pursuit the Parliamentarians had however fortified the Church, and from thence it was impossible to dislodge them, so Poyer agreed they should retire to their ships on condition they left the Haven and did not return."

Poyer then proceeded to Henllan House, where there were Mr. Griffith White the staunch old Parliament man, the owner of the house; Mr. Roger Lort of Stackpole; the Royalist Adjutant-General Fleming; Mr. John Lort of Prickeston; and several other gentle men and commissioners; these also escaped by water. It is said that while flying from Poyer Mr. White dropped a number of gold pieces which have from time to time been picked up near the ruins of Henllan. Matters had now become very serious.

Poyer had between 1200 and 1300 men under arms, and the country was rising in his favour. Sir Henry Stradling, Major-General John Stradling, Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Stradling, Lieutenant-Colonel John Butler, Colonel Morgan (Governor of Gloucester), Colonel Richard Donnel (late Governor of Swansea), all joined the rebels. The Earl of Carbery however would have nothing to do with them. On the 9th of April Poyer held a great review on Colby Moor. He then marched to Carmarthen where he was joined by Powell. The Parliamentary leaders had by this time recognised the extreme gravity of the situation. The fire that self-seeking Mayor Poyer had lit in west Wales kindled every disaffected spirit in the realm. Colonel Horton was directed to March westward with all speed, and a detachment of Colonel Reade's force at Bristol, under Colonel Overton, was ordered to proceed to Pembrokeshire. In April Horton overpowered the disaffected garrison at Brecon and shortly afterwards disbanded certain local troops at Swansea. Meanwhile Poyer and Powell had pushed on to Lampeter with a body of English, Scotch, Irish and Welsh. Recruits for the King's army were hurrying forward from all parts; not only the country gentlemen and their followers, "but divers porters, butchers, and such rascally fellows come hither (to Carmarthen) from London." Besides this Welsh army the Scotch were causing great anxiety to the Parliamentarians, for it was an open secret that they might rise any day. The Royalist cause was looking up.

About the beginning of May Horton entered Carmarthenshire. The Pembroke men had broken down the bridges, and were now camped near the Towy river. Captains Cozens and Addys, of Laugharne's horse, were despatched to fortify Newcastle in Emlyn; there was some slight skirmishing between the two armies, but without serious result. At length Poyer entrenched himself on a hilltop near LLandilo Fawr, and so strong was his position that Horton feared to attack. Colonel Fleming was ordered to make for a pass in Poyer's rear, where he was met by Major Roach in command of a troop of Powell's. The latter retired and was pursued by Colonel Fleming, who fell into an ambush prepared for him in the town of LLandilo Fawr, where his force was cut in two. The Colonel with one hundred troopers fled to the Church which Poyer's men stormed and there either by accident or intent Fleming shot himself. So terribly were the Parliamentarians affected by Fleming's tragic end that Horton fell back on Neath to await reinforcements under Colonel Okey, from whence he retired to Brecon, the people showing hostility on the whole line of March. The House of Commons fully realised the gravity of the situation. On the 1st of May Fairfax informed Mr. Speaker that Cromwell and a sufficient force had been despatched into Wales.

Poyer had marched through Carmarthen and proceeded towards Cardiff, with a view to raise Glamorganshire and Monmouth. Colonel Horton having obtained reinforcements and ammunition retraced his steps with all speed that bad roads, unseasonable weather, and lack of accommodation for man and beast allowed. On the 4th of May he camped at St. Fagans on the little river Ely. Poyer's men were at St. Nicholas.

“It is reported that Major-General Laugharne is come unto Poyer; whether it were he or not we cannot tell but the Welsh shot off all their guns lately to welcome some person of quality.”

He certainly was with them when they reached St. Nicholas,

On the evening of Sunday Laugharne and Poyer advanced towards St. Nicholas about 8000 strong, and on Monday, May 8th, about seven in the morning attacked Horton's force. After a stubborn fight the Pembrokeshire men were driven back from hedge to hedge until they arrived at bridge where their reserves were; at length Horton's horse crossed the stream and flanked the Welshmen, who then gave way and fled panic-stricken. Horton's horse pursued them for eight or ten miles. Major-General Rowland Laugharne was wounded, and his brother Thomas was among the slain who were so numerous that the river Ely ran red from St. Fagans down to Penarth. Three thousand prisoners were taken, with 2000 firearms, with pikes, Welsh bills, 50 colours, 360 horse, and all the ammunition, bag and baggage. Among the prisoners were Major Addys, the same who joined Poyer in Pembroke; Thomas Bowen of Trefloyne; James Lewis of Kilkyffeth; Lieutenant-Colonel Wogan of Wiston (?); Captain William Button, and Mr. Devereux Grafton of Carew. On Horton's side were Thomas Wogan, M.P. for Cardigan boroughs, sent hither by the House of Commons, and subsequently distinguished as one of the regicides; and Captain Jones, captured by Laugharne at Carew who on that occasion turned coat. This man again changed sides, for deserting Poyer with a troop of sixty horse he joined Horton. The defeated army of Royalists and Presbyterians fled to the westward, Laugharne and Poyer making good their retreat to Pembroke, while Powell with a hundred troopers took refuge in Tenby. To these shortly afterwards came in many fugitives, who straightaway set to work preparing for a desperate resistance.

Colonel Horton proceeded to take vengeance. Eleven of the principal prisoners were brought on board the Admiral Crowther man-of-war then lying at Cardiff, and tried by court martial: Major-General Stradling, Major Phillips, Captain Thomas Matthews, Captain Button (Laugharne's brother-in-law), Mr. Miles Matthews, Lieutenant-Colonel Hopkin Popkins, Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Morgan, Colonel Arthur Harries, Captain Edward Walker, Captain Rich Cradock, and Lieutenant-Colonel Lewis Thomas. Of these three were shot and one hanged. This excessive severity was perhaps necessary, for the insurrection was spreading. The number of prisoners, said to have been 3000, was so great that an application was made to the Parliament by Prince Charles Lodovick to have permission to transport some of the prisoners to Italy. This was granted with the proviso that they should be volunteers and confined to the common people of Wales. Any from outside Wales were to be transported to the West Indies.

Colonel Horton did not waste time; he followed up his victory and must have reached Tenby close behind the fugitives under Powell, the victory at St. Fagans was won on Monday, May 8th. On the Sunday Colonel Horton's men attempted to storm the town of Tenby but were repulsed. The Parliamentarians subsequently attacked again and took a certain work with thirty prisoners and some slain. Disconcerted by this further misfortune the besieged humbly desired permission to March out upon conditions.

On Wednesday, May 31, 1648, the garrison of Tenby under Colonel Powell desired that Colonel Horton would take them into protection and mercy. The conditions of surrender were as follows:

1. That the besieged delivered up all the ordnance, arms and ammunition of the Castle, to Lieutenant-General Cromwell for the use of the Parliament.
2. That the common soldiers be permitted (those who will) to be transported into Italy.
3. That those soldiers who desire to go home may be permitted, taking an oath never to engage against the Parliament hereafter.
4. That all the officers surrender themselves prisoners, their lives and estates to be at the mercy of the Parliament.

These latter were: Colonel Rice Powell, Colonel Edward Kemeys, Colonel Richard Donnell, Sergeant-Major Vaughan, Captain Beale, Captain Addys, Captain Powell, Mr. Thomas Basset, ; and thirty others One hundred soldiers agreed to go abroad, twenty pieces of ordnance three hundred arms, four barrels of powder that had been partly used, forty horses only five colours and the standard of Tenby Castle; all their ammunition, provisions, bag and baggage were captured. Though the town of Tenby probably did not suffer so severely during Horton's siege in May, 1648, as when Laugharne operated against it in April, 1644, yet perhaps we should ascribe certain wanton mischief which some evil persons perpetrated in the Church of St. Mary's to the Independents commanded by Horton. The west window of the north aisle was once filled with fine stained glass, but it was utterly destroyed, perhaps at this time; the only relics of its former grandeur being a few fragments round the edges. And on William Risam's monument there is a Mark which tradition has always attributed to a musket ball aimed at the benefactor's effigy by one of "Cromwell's soldiers."

To return to General Laugharne and Colonel Poyer. After the disastrous fight at St. Fagan's they retreated to Pembroke and prepared for the mighty adversary who was slowly advancing to try conclusions. Oliver Cromwell appeared before Pembroke about the 24th of May. Tradition relates that he formed his camp on the Hill to the south of the town, near Underdown. (Pistol and musket balls have been found on the site) The General himself, who was suffering from an attack of gout, took up his quarters with Mr. Walter Cuney at Welston, a house which stood to the north-east (in Carew Parish) of Lamphey, and was pulled down early in 1800's. Fenton states that in his time there was "A quilted counterpane White lined with crimson that covered Cromwell's bed, still in the possession of a lady, a descendant of that house (Cuney), stained with ink spilled as he was writing one of his despatches during his confinement" (from gout).

Cromwell expected that by the time he reached Pembroke a battery of siege guns from Wallingford would have awaited his orders in Milford Haven, but through an accident at Berkeley the vessel in which they were shipped seems to have foundered, and as westerly gales prevailed, when the guns had been recovered it was impossible to deliver them in Pembroke until the beginning of July. The besiegers would have been checkmated had it not happened that the Lion, a Parliamentary warship, came into Milford Haven.

Cromwell forthwith despatched the notorious Hugh Peters, who had accompanied the expedition, to see what guns could be spared from the Lion; two culverins (18 pounders), two demi.culverins, and two drakes were obtained from this source. The first operation essayed by the besiegers was an attempt to storm the town one day about the 4th of June, but the scaling ladders were too short. A few men were lost Major Grigg's lieutenant and ensign among them, Captain Flower of Dean's regiment was injured, and Captain Burgess wounded and very sick; but Cromwell consoled himself in his confidence that the enemy had lost many more.

On the 9th of June Cromwell wrote to the committee at Carmarthen :

"desiring we may have your furtherance and assistance in procuring some necessaries to be cast in the iron furnaces in your county of Carmarthen, which will the better enable us to reduce the town and Castle of Pembroke. The principal things are: shells for our mortar piece, the depth of them we desire may be 14 inches That which I desire at your hands is to cause the service to be performed, and that with all possible expedition; that so if it be the will of God, the service being done, these poor wasted counties may be freed from the burden of the Army. In the next place we desire some Cannon shot and some culverin shot may with all possibility be cast for us and hasted to us also"

On the 13th Cromwell had planted two little guns with which he calculated he should take away their mills in twenty-four hours. The mills were probably those at the bottom of the Dark Lane, and the guns must have been placed on the other side of the water. The loss of these mills would prove very important to the besieged, who began to suffer greatly from famine; indeed the hungry garrison were already mutinous, saying: "shall we be ruined for two or three men's pleasure; better it were to throw them over the wall," This occurred on Sunday. On Saturday night Poyer had told the mutineers if relief did not arrive on Monday they might hang him. No doubt Colonel Poyer remembered how closely he had been pressed by the Royalists in 1644, and how triumphantly he had been relieved by Swanley's fleet; he was in hourly expectation that Prince Charles and Lord Jermyn would send the squadron to his aid. On one occasion, the besieged garrison believed that the Royalist fleet had actually arrived, for guns were heard down the Haven. It turned out; however, to be the Parliamentary fleet firing a salute on account of good news from Kent, Pembroke was not victualled for a siege. This had not entered into Poyer's calculations. There were probably in Pembroke Castle only surplus stores such as had remained unconsumed when Fleming was forced to raise the siege. These, originally intended for the Castle garrison, proved quite insufficient now Poyer had to feed the town as well. At the very beginning of the siege we find fodder was so scarce that horses and cows were fed on thatch stripped from the cottages. On the 14th of June the mutinous garrison was put on reduced rations: half-a-pound of beef and half a pound of Bread per day to each man. The civilians in the town doubtless were very hardly pressed. Tradition avers the town and Castle relied on two wells for their supply of water: one called Norgan's, in Monkton; the other in the Woogan under Pembroke Castle. Earthenware pipes three-and-a-half inches in diameter had been laid in cement from Norgan's well, nearly a mile distant, passing over the bridge, up the face of the cliff under an archway in the Monkton tower of the Castle. According to tradition this pipe was pointed out to the besiegers by a man named Edmunds, and cut through where it passed over the bridge. Edmunds' cottage was still pointed out in Monkton village in the 1890's, and his descendants bore the nickname of "Cromwell" in remembrance of the treason of their ancestor, until they became extinct a hundred years ago. Tradition says also that Edmund was killed by the Cromwellian soldiers and buried in the hole dug to cut the pipe. Part of the pipe is in Tenby Museum and another part used to be in the wall of the old school in Monkton. Concerning the Woogan well, Cromwell writes : "We can take away his water in two days by beating down a staircase, which goes into a cellar where he hath a well.

Mr. Cobb has pointed out that the staircase leading to the Woogan was not beaten down, and there can be little doubt that the besieged had an uninterrupted access to this well. On the night of the 13th Cromwell got two small guns to bear on the Pembroke flour mills and set on fire certain houses in the town.

On the 19th the besieged were sore pressed by famine, and Poyer tried to keep up the spirit of the soldiery (who now despaired of relief from Prince Charles) by assuring them that Major-General Langdale was marching to their assistance with an army of North Welshmen, and would be at Pembroke before the week went by.

Cromwell's guns had breached the wall, and about the 19th date another storming party was told off. These made an attempt to gain the town, but were repulsed, twenty-three being slain, Poyer's men only losing four. By this time General Laugharne had recovered of his wounds received at St. Fagans and determined on sallying forth, probably with the hope of obtaining food. He does not appear to have been very successful, and was driven back with a loss of nine killed and twenty prisoners. Oliver Cromwell candidly acknowledges :

"Here is as I have formerly acquainted your excellency (Fairfax) a very desperate enemy, who being put out of all hope of mercy, are resolved to endure the uttermost, being very many gentlemen of quality, and men thoroughly resolved, they have made some notable sallies upon Lieutenant-Colonel Reade's quarter, to his loss. We are forced to keep divers posts or else they would have relief or their horse break away. Our foot about them are 2400; we always necessitated to have some in garrison. The country since we sat down before this place have made two or three insurrections, and are ready to do it every day, so that what with looking to them and disposing of our horse to that end, and to get us in provision, without which we should starve, the country being so miserably exhausted and so poor, and we no money to buy victuals, indeed whatever may be thought it is a mercy we have been able to keep our men together in the midst of such necessity, the sustenance of the foot for the most part being but Bread and water."

About the beginning of July a storming party managed to get into the town and drove the besieged up to the Castle walls, killing about one hundred of them. But Laugharne with a troop of horse out-flanked the intruders, and getting on their rear cut them up, killing thirty and driving the rest over the breach. In this fight Colonel Horton again distinguished himself

The siege battery had at last arrived, and the fire on the town became consequently distressing. Many desertions took place and a mutinous spirit again broke out, one hundred and twenty of Poyer's men laying down their arms, vowing they would fight no more but the Colonel quelled the unrest, he and Laugharne promising if relief did not come days they might hang their leaders. "The mortar pieces played hard against the town and battered down many houses, killing some thirty of the inhabitants, for though they could affect little or no damage on the Castle, the cottages yielded to the small projectiles

. The besiegers feared Laugharne; Poyer and such troops as they could rely on would remove all provision to the Castle, retire fortress and allow the townsmen to surrender

Cromwell before the latter sent his ultimatum in the following terms :

Sir

,-I have together with my Council of War renewed my propositions,

I thought fit to you with these alterations, which if submitted unto I shall make good. I have considered your condition and my own duty, and (without threatening) must tell you that if (for the sake of some) this offer be refused and thereby misery and ruin befall the poor soldiers and people with you, I know where to charge the blood you spil

I expect your answer within these two hours. In case this offer be refused, send no more to me about this subject

July 10 at 4 o'clock this afternoon, 1648.

I rest your servant,

The besieged took a night to think over Oliver's letter, and on the next day surrendered the town and Castle on the following conditions :-

1. That Major-General Laugharne, Colonel Poyer, Colonel Humphrey Mathews, Captain Wiliam Bowen and David Poyer do surrender themselves to the mercy of the Parliament.
2. That Sir Charles Kemeys, Sir Henry Stradling Lieutenant-Colonel Laugharne, Lieutenant-Colonel Brabason, Mr. Gamage, Major Butler, Major Francis Lewis, Major Mathews, Major Hamick Captain Roach, Captain Jones, Captain Hugh Bowen , Captain Thomas Watts and Lieutenant Young do within six weeks next following depart the kingdom, and not to return within two years from the time of their departure.
3. That all officers and gentlemen not before named shall have free liberty to go to their several habitations, and there live quietly submitting to the authority of Parliament.
- 4.. That all private soldiers shall have passes to go to their several houses without being stripped or having any violence done to them ; all the sick and wounded were to be carefully provided for till able to go home,
5. That the townsmen shall be free from plunder and violence, and enjoy their liberties as heretofore they have done, having freedom to remove themselves and families whither they shall think fit &c.
6. That the town and Castle of Pembroke, with all the arms, ammunition and ordnance, together with the victuals and provisions for the garrison be forthwith delivered unto Lieatenant-

General Cromwell, or such as he shall appoint, for the use of the Parliament.

.Signed by Oliver Cromwell.

David Poyer.

In a letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons, written immediately after the surrender,

Oliver Cromwell explains the first clause in the articles of surrender:

“The persons excepted are such as have formerly served you in a very good cause; but being now apostatized I did rather make election of them than of those who had always been for the King judging their iniquity double, because they have sinned against so much light, and against so many evidences of Divine Providence, going along with and prospering a just cause, in the management of which they themselves had a share.”

Thus ended Pembroke seige. The defenders had fought with dogged desperation, and had they not been deserted by the Royalist party it seems possible Cromwell himself might have been baffled by their tactics. We can see Poyer standing on the old donjon looking away to the westward with despairing eyes, keeping watch in vain for the Royalist squadron that never came. Arnulph de Montgomery's stronghold was impregnable in the 17th century, as it had proved in the 12th ; famine alone opened its gates, for Cromwell's shot and shell glanced from the old limestone walls like hailstones ; in the town his projectiles did much damage, but proved impotent when applied to the Castle masonry. Very many Cannon balls fired from Royalist and ' Parliamentary guns have been collected in Pembroke, Tenby, Carew and Lamphey, and an interesting series of these projectiles will be found in the Tenby Local Museum. The weight of these shot is as follow: 32lb., 18lb., 9lb. ; 6lb., 3lb., 2lb. They are all of solid cast iron,

Laws said that” There are preserved in Pembroke and at Lamphey Court some curious stone shot the size of eighteen pounders, though of course weighing much less ; these were no doubt makeshifts when the ammunition ran short”

. The Pembroke specimens were found by Mr. Cobb within the Castle walls; those at Lamphey were discovered on the top of the Hill three-quarters of a mile from the Old Court, at a farm-house known as "Old Windsor," and are doubtless relics of one of the uprisings noted by Cromwell.

In the Tenby Museum will be found also a very curious gun (Both the breech and muzzle are lost. It seems to have carried a 9lb. shot, and is built up of iron pieces, banded together by eight rings. At the breech it has been strengthened by a flap, which was welded on to the gun. It is on an oak carriage nine feet four inches in length. Such was the ordnance used and the castles certainly beat the guns; very few, if any, of these were taken except by storm or famine.

The castles having proved so formidable, Cromwell decided on their destruction. Roger Lort, John Lort and Thomas Barlow were formed into a committee for this purpose. Cromwell himself perhaps undertook the destruction of Pembroke, the roof of its vaulted Barbican tower has been split in by gunpowder, and this must have been accomplished subsequently to the surrender of the fortress

It would be curious to know what work the committee of demolition performed. Not very much at Haverfordwest or Pembroke; nothing at Carew or Narberth; the former being inhabited in 1689, the latter in 1676; or Picton, which never lost its roof. Manorbier was already a ruin. Perhaps Lamphey suffered. Tenby Castle was the principal victim; though it is by no means improbable the smaller fortifications such as Newport, Roche and Benton were more or less destroyed under this commission, the inhabitants finding that the demolition of the unoffending castlets was cheaper than the raising of Pembroke and Haverfordwest.

It was probably on Sunday, July the 16th, that Oliver Cromwell invited the Rev. Peregrine Phillips, Vicar of Monkton, St. Mary's (Pembroke), and Coshaston, to preach before the officers under his command. Phillips must have been well known to most of them, for notwithstanding the inconveniences of the siege he preferred to reside in his parish of Monkton rather than in the comparatively peaceful Cosheston. Peregrine Phillips was the son of that Vicar of Amroth who declined to Read the Book of Sports, and suffered accordingly; probably in consequence of the father's firmness the son found friends. Sir Hugh Owen had given him the preferment of Monkton; Roger Lort that of St. Mary's, Pembroke; and he obtained Cosheston through the interest of Sir John Meyrick. He had been chosen one of the committee to inquire into the conduct of ministers; but all this availed him nothing during the siege, for the hungry Parliamentary troopers searched his house so diligently that he was obliged to secrete his scanty stock of flour in the bolster of his bed. Yet Phillips stood to his post, and with him remained a certain plucky servant-maid who was in the habit of milking the Parson's cow, caring nought for the storm of shot and shell which hurtled overhead. A gable end in the village of Monkton marked the site of Phillips' old vicarage.

By Monday, the 17th, Cromwell must have pretty well accomplished his work, the hostile troops were disbanded, the fortifications sentenced to destruction, and the prisoners despatched to their various destinations. He left Colonel Horton, the victor of St. Fagans and the captor of Tenby, in command of the district, with his (Horton's) regiment of horse, a troop of dragoons, and two companies out of Colonel Pride's and Colonel Deane's regiments,

1648 .August 13.

COLONEL Thomas Horton TO George Beavan.

You are to repair with the party of Captain Bowlton's dragoons to St Davids in Pembrocksheere and with their assistance to bring from thence to Carmarthen 3000 weight of lead. You are to quarter where you think it most convenient, going and coming in the hundreds of Narbarth, Dewysland and Roose. And if the chief constables of the said hundreds be negligent in providing you horses for the carriage of the lead, you shall quarter your whole party upon that constable that you shall find faulty until he conforms to what is expected. And this shall be you: warrant for your thus doing.

Haverfordwest Corporation MS. 261.

1648 December 13. Tenbye.

COLONEL Thomas Horton TO THE SOLDIERS UNDER HIS COMMAND .

Whereas I have been informed that divers soldiers both dragoons and foot under my command within this county of Pembrock have by disorderly carriage and misbehaviour in their quarters forced their landlords to quarter them in inns and alehouses, the dragoons at 3s. 6d. per diem and the foot at 1s. per diem, as well for the punishment of the said offence as the prevention of the same and others for the future I do deClare that if any soldier or soldiers have or shall commit the said offence or any other contrary to the articles of war, upon complaint made unto the chief officer unto whose troop or company such soldier or soldiers do belong and proof thereof made by examination of Witnesses upon oath or confession of the party before the next Justice of the Peace in the presence of the said chief officer and transmitted to the governor of Tenbye (whither the offender is by the said chief officer likewise to be sent in custody), the party offended shall have due reparation and the offender undergo the judgement of a court martial. And that where any inhabitant charged with quartering of soldiers shall not upon examination by the said chief officer be found to have fit accommodation to quarter any soldier or soldiers in his dwelling house, that then such inhabitant do agree with the soldier in the presence of the chief officer at such reasonable rates as that the soldier may be able to provide himself quarters and the landlords not exacted upon and oppressed by an unreasonable charge exceeding the pay of such soldiers.

Laugharne, Poyer and Powell were sent up to the Tower, from whence they seem to have been removed to Windsor Castle Their trial was postponed until the following spring, when Laugharne, Poyer and Powell were found guilty by a court-martial and sentenced to death. This seems to have been a somewhat unexpected conclusion. The exiled King (Charles I I.) threatened reprisals, and

Poyer, who was evidently astonished, on April 16, 1649, presented a humble petition to Parliament which declared that “He was one of the first that appeared in armies in South Wales against the Common Enemy for the defence of his own and the people's best liberties ; and being Mayor of the towne of Pembrock and captayn of the trayned band did freely and of his own accord fortifie the Castle of Pembrock, which was then his own habitation" and kept the same against the King's forces, and did for the space of five years several other good services~ but that being wrongly proclaimed Traitor, he did, for his owne securitie and for the securifie of those who were with him and for no other end, keepe the said Castle, which was surrendered to Lieut. General Cromwell, upon articles of mercy, which could not be mercy in taking away his life.”

But it was felt that public security demanded a victim. Laugharne, Poyer and Powell were bidden to cast lots for life. The actual drawing was done by a child. There were three lots. On two was written, " Life given of God," the third was a blank; this fell to Colonel Poyer, who was duly shot in the Piazza, Covent Garden, on April 21st 1649.

David Poyer's daughter married one Nash, a Swansea glass manufacturer, and by him became mother of a son Richard, afterwards known as Beau Nash, "King" of Bath.

General Laugharne in due time returned to his home

Powell too escaped and founded a family

Lieutenant-Colonel Laugharne passed over to Ireland, In the spring of 1650 he again fell into Oliver's hands at the taking of Cahir, and "was shot to death."

The fate of Colonel Humphrey Matthews gave rise to some discussion, He was released on paying composition, a decision Cromwell in no ways approved.

Sir Charles Kemeys of Cefn Mabley, besides his two years' exile, was fined

Colonel Thomas Stradling forfeited fined

Miles Button escaped with a small fine

War effected a great change in west Wales. The district was exhausted; the towns of Pembroke and Tenby were so utterly ruined that henceforth they ceased to have any political influence The former remains a seventeenth century fossil, in much the same condition as on the morning John Poyer rode through its street to meet his doom in Covent garden. Tenby gradually became ruinous; but in course of time, thanks to tourism now enjoys some prosperity as a resort, but commercial and military Tenby has disappeared for ever

St Mary's late 12c or early 13c with two 13c windows still visible in south wall

Before the restoration the interior of the Church was described as being filled with wretched dilapidated pews, miscalled pews and the walls daubed over with unsightly colour washes. Some of the windows were of the sash type.

1839 Acc to Lewis

The Church dedicated to St Mary is an ancient and venerable structure, in the Norman style, situated near the centre of the town, and composed of a nave, chancel, and northern aisle, with a small Chapel on the southern side: in the north aisle and in the chancel are doorways, now closed up, which communicated with additional buildings no longer standing.

1922 RCAM

The present building dates from the latter half of the 13th century and may have been erected simultaneously with the walls around the newly laid out town of Pembroke. But there may have existed an earlier Church of St Mary, for it seems probable that the growing importance of the town as the principal port of departure for Ireland would soon require a rearrangement of the ecclesiastical facilities within the Castle, and this might have been met by the building of a Church affording increased accommodation and shelter from external foes by the shelter of the Gateway tower. In 1880 the then vicar told members of the Cambrian Archaeological Association that "the south wall of the nave would appear to be late Norman as under the plaster are two windows, one of which is round headed and the other is cut off by a later inserted window" (Arch Camb IV,xi,333). The north aisle, which has a plain vault, is divided from the nave by an arcade of four bays of plain pointed arches devoid of mouldings. All the windows are modern. The font is probably of the late Norman period. On the north side of the chancel arch is a much weathered elaborately carved stone panel 24 in by 36 in which may have been part of a late Decorated tomb. visited 10th May 1922

1999

Today you enter the Church through the modern porch erected in 1926 as a memorial to the Rev Hayward Phillips,

The South wall is one of the original walls of the Church. Under its plaster is hidden two Norman windows one of which is round headed but the top of the other was destroyed by the insertion of a later window. When the Church was replastered in 1879 the architect Mr Pearson ordered that the windows be indicated and a line was drawn around the west one.

The doorway to what is known as the choir vestry is the original entrance to the Church. On its outer side is some early English moulding similar to that over the entrance to Monkton Priory and to one of the doorways in St David's Cathedral. Above the doorway is a niche, which would have originally contained a statue of the Virgin Mary, but which now contains a tablet to a former benefactor of St Mary's Church.

The North Aisle - the arcade of pillars which separates the nave from the north aisle was made from the original wall of the Church in about 1350 when the tower was built. The north aisle with its pointed vaulting, so typical of Pembrokeshire Church architecture of this period, has modern windows which feature St David, William Marshall and Henry Tudor.

The font is a square bowl supported by a cylindrical stem with cable moulding and is reputed to be Norman but records from the time of the restoration show that it is actually a modern copy of the one at Lamphey. There is no documentary evidence to support the claim that Henry VII was baptised here. At the east end of the North Aisle are the memorials to the Adams Family of Paterchurch and Holyland

One of these is especially interesting. It is a piece of carved alabaster it appears to have been deliberately defaced and from its weathered appearance discarded. In 1610 William Adams died aged 8 years 5 weeks and 2 days and the old panel was reused as a memorial to him and was set with its carved face hidden into the plaster of the wall. It was rediscovered at the 1879 restoration and is exhibited as it is now. I had thought that this might have come from a burial at Paterchurch - but the burial site was being used by the Adams family long after 1610

1731--St Mary s register states --Jan ye 11 buried ye sonne ,Roger, of Mr Williams Adames in their own Burying Ground.

It is made of Buxton alabastine and dates from between 1475 and 1482 and was the side panels of a tomb. It would appear that the angels depicted were only carved in that form between those dates. The tomb must have been of a person of the rank somewhere between Baron and Earl or their widow and was presumably destroyed at the reformation.

The recess high on this east wall would have housed a galley similar to that which can still be seen at Manorbier. The blocked doorway can still be seen in the ringing chamber of the tower

The Lady Chapel, has an interesting 17c memorial It seems that the first lines of this fanciful verse refer to the fact that there was a thunderstorm coinciding with a high tide which brought flooding on the day of the funeral

The Pulpit was given to the Church by Col M J Saurin

The modern Chancel arch replaces a narrow opening over which stood a rood screen and a loft. The corbelled structure over the Organ probably supported another gallery there is a blocked doorway to this also in the ringing chamber..

Behind the Altar the Reredos depicting Christ in Majesty, is designed by J L Pearson who supervised the renovation work of 1879.

Above it the great east Window is one of the best examples of C E Kempe. There are another seven Kempe windows in the Church with his trademark (a Wheatsheaf) on them. There is also one in St John's Church Pembroke Dock.

On the north side of the altar is yet another blocked doorway, which led out to a lean-to building at the base of the tower which once served as a vestry. On the south side of the altar, above the niche which once held a piscina, is a small vaulted recess of unknown purpose. It could have been a reliquary but nobody is able to give a satisfactory explanation of its origin. In the sanctuary stands a beautiful carved chair representing St Peters denial

Above the Organ rises the tower described by Victorian ecclesiologist Professor Freeman as "among the most remarkable towers of Pembrokeshire.... conspicuous for its massiveness, which gives it a more military effect than any of the others" It contains a ring of 8 bells, the earliest dating from 1763. The newer two were added in 1897 to commemorate Queen Victoria's Jubilee

Among the sacramental vessels is a chalice of great historical importance. It was presented to the parish in 1645 by Col. John Poyer, governor of the town and Castle. He was one of the leaders of those who held the town and Castle against Cromwell and died by firing squad in Covent Garden There is another modern one given by Sir Fredrick Meyrick and a replica of that found in Bishop de Carew's Tomb (1256?) given by Mr A G O Mathias

The reopening of the Church took place on 1st May 1882 by the archdeacon of St David's after the nave had been re roofed and the seating was replaced between then and 1889. In 1889 funds were raised which with that already donated by Miss Bowling were used to install an Organ. Miss Bowling also paid for the three lancet windows in the north aisle
Prior to the restoration displayed in the Church were two charity boards.

St Ann's Church

RCAM 840

Of this small Chapel to the parish Church of St Mary there remained in Fenton's day "scarce a memorial" (Tours 373) and at the present time those few vestiges have completely disappeared. It is therefore, pleasant to be able to identify the site with almost certainty by aid of the French plan of Pembroke, which shows the Church in the year 1650, as existing, though perhaps deserted.

Pembroke St Michael's

[This Church is now closed and up for disposal]

St Michaels, which dates from the later 13c, there is a suggestion that the initial settlement of Pembroke begun by Arnulf de Montgomery in the 1090s was subsequently enlarged with an eastward extension of the earlier defences. This view is strengthened by the presence of two medieval Market places within the borough, one by St Mary's Church which would correspond to the Norman commercial centre, and another at the eastern end of the peninsular near the East Gate which would have served the inhabitants of the larger late medieval town

The original Church would have appeared to have been a cross Church with a Long nave and small transepts; drawings on maps would suggest that it has a centre tower. This was pulled down in 1835 and a new building erected on the original site described by Professor Babbington in 1880 as "the ugliest structure I have ever seen" the windows were of the sash type and parts of the North wall were original with the tower being retained at the North East Angle which would indicate that the South side was completely rebuilt and the original Chancel removed.

Acc to Lewis "The Church dedicated to St Michael has been rebuilt almost from the ground, in the late English style of architecture, the expenses being defrayed by a parochial rate; it will accommodate about 1000 persons and the number of free sittings is 400".

This structure was pulled down in 1887 and the Church as we see it today built.

Designed by Mr E H Lingen Barker of Hereford it was built by Mr Henry Edwards of Milford at a cost £1800. Bath stone was used for the arches, columns and pulpit. Only the base of the tower and parts of the north wall were recorded at the time as being of the original Church.

The Chancel stained Glass window was given by Mrs Bryant and cost £160 it was made by Cox and Sons London; she also gave the Eagle lectern.

The floor of the chancel is covered with ornamental encaustic tiles from Messrs Webb, Worcester. The Organ was installed in 1888 made by Wade, previous to that, in the old Church, a harmonium had been used played by a Miss Aird who went to live in Ireland before the new Church was completed. The new organist was Mr T Jones.

The choir stalls and desks are made of pitch pine and the carving was done by Herridge of Cardiff.

The roof is covered with slated from the quarry of Mr George L Griffiths in North

350 +100 scholars attended Church in the morning and 350 in the evening

Collections averaged 14 shilling in 1883 and the meetings of the Temperance society every fortnight in the Sunday School room attracted an attendance of over 180.

1922 RCAM

Though both Speed's and the French plan of the town make it clear that there existed within the town walls in the year 1650 a Church dedicated to St Michael, the present edifice belongs wholly to the early 19th century. It was restored in 1886.

1922 RCAM

According to Fenton (Tours 373) "St Michael's had a subordinate Chapel, or as in a Ms now in my possession, I find it called a hospital, or hospitium, dedicated to St Mary Magdalene, a little to the eastward of the Church, without the town walls; and like every other establishment of that sort placed near the roadside. The site is now known by the name of Marlan's Chapel"

St Daniels Church (c) 1992 Basil H J Hughes

Chapter 1 The Church of St Daniel's Pembroke

St Daniel's Could ring a knell

When Pembroke was a furzy dell

So says an old rhyme told me by a very old lady who heard it from her grandmother. I wonder how old that rhyme is, because though Pembroke is 900 years old, the Church of St Daniel, as it is known today, although the real name should be St Deiniol, could well be centuries earlier.

The lonely Church stands on the skyline to the south of Pembroke, with a tower and spire standing proud amidst the electricity pylons.

That the Church has dominated this skyline since before the Norman's is suggested by the description of the RCAM which leads one to believe that this is the original Church of the Welsh District of Penvo_

In more recent times the spire of Church has been used by Lieutenant Colonel William Mudge and Captain Thomas Colby as one of the main inland trigonometric points for the first Ordnance Survey Map of the area, which was published on the 16th February 1818. The Church appears on all the early maps of the area (the earliest being 1580) as well as on the French artist's (or was it spy) drawing of the town and Castle in 1650 but it would appear that he took poetic licence with regard to the exact position (RCAM p287).

The Church and the Hill on which it stands have Long been referred to by writers as St Daniel's and local legend has always credited the site as being that of the original hermitage of the Saint, a place of pilgrimage and the earliest Church in the district.

The present Church is a single chambered building 64.5 feet Long by 16.5 ft wide and has the high pitched vaulted roof so often found in the earliest churches of Dyfed. The tower and spire are evidently later, possibly added on in the early 14 century and have been largely repaired as a result of being struck by lightning. It would seem to be one of a line of such Church towers stretching along the spine of the Castlemartin peninsular constructed at about the same time as some of the strengthening of the Pembroke Castle fortifications.

In the north wall can be seen the traces of a low side window. This it is suggested, was pierced after the construction of St Mary's Church Pembroke, to enable the Mass Bell of St Mary's down in the valley to be heard by the congregation of St Deniol's (RCAM visited 10th May 1922)

The present interior is very plain, with White washed walls rising in a curve to the apex of the roof. The present interior floor, of even blocks is lower than the ground outside and it is necessary to go down steps when entering the Church. The only doorway is situated on the north side.

There is no artificial light or heating, and today most of the windows, which have been inserted at later dates than the original building, have been covered because of vandalism. The Church therefore still, like it has been all its life probably, is lit by candles. The floor is very uneven, consisting of bricks many of which are loose and at the west end there is a low doorway leading into the tower. This tower had, at one time several floors and the holes where the timber joists entered the walls are still visible. It also has a fireplace. The Church was restored in 1849, and again in 1890. The tower was struck by lightning in 1896 and needed repair but on inspecting the interior it is plainly evident because of the continuity of the stonework that it most certainly was never rebuilt and such repairs as there was could not have been major.

The one memorial plaque, in the Church, is to Ernald Somerset Birkett, and reads:-
...in memory of Ernald Somerset Birkett 13 years Church Warden of St Mary's Parish his friends dedicate this tablet
During his wardenship the old choir stalls from St Mary's were removed to this Church and Chancel renovated
C Hayward Vicar
Date Dec. 20 1910

Legend also has it that there was, at one time, a Holy Well near the Church but that the well and site were destroyed when there was a purge ordered, in July 1592, against all places within the county of Pembroke where in times past there have been pilgrimages, images or offerings. The order authorised that all using those places of pilgrimage should be apprehended and punished for their disobedience and lewd behaviour, the sites were to be defaced so that no memory remained of them.

[I went over the area with dowsing rods but the only reaction I got was inside the base of the Church tower at the south east corner]

Chapter 2 Who was St Deiniol

St Deiniol it is believed , was the son of Dunawd fab Pabo Post Prydyn.

Dunawd was, according to an early poem, a very brave warrior, who never retreated in battle and whose family originated from around the Clyde Forth area. They were a cadet branch of the royal line of Coel Hen.

By Deiniol's time the family had roots in north Wales and there appears to be some mystery about the Saint's connection with Pembrokeshire but one theory is that, like so many other young men of the time, he went to attend a school which had been founded in the Valle of Glamorgan by St Illtud around 490 AD.

St Illtud was described by St Samson, one of his pupils, as "of all Britons, best skilled in Holy Scripture, both the Old Testament and the New, as well as in every kind of learning; in divination he was well proven and he had fore-knowledge of the future". Gildas, also a pupil at the school, called him " the refined master of almost all Britain" both Illtud and Dyfrig used Caldy Island, off the Pembrokeshire coast near Tenby , as a place of retreat. Deiniol may well have followed their example in choosing a place in Pembrokeshire as a quiet place for prayer and meditation before embarking on his mission, setting up a hermitage on a Hill to the south of where Pembroke now stands and spending some time there before travelling up the coast till he eventually arrived and established a Church at a site where now stands his cathedral at Bangor

Legend says that he was ordained in 516AD and it is believed that he became Bishop of Bangor before 547 AD as he was given land for his Church by Maelgwn, King of Gwynedd who died as a result of the epidemic of Yellow Plague which swept through the country in that year._.

St Deiniol was present at the Synod of Brefi in 545/6 AD and is mentioned in the “Life of St David” by Rhigyfarch .

He was buried in 584 AD (according to Annales Cambriae) on Bardsey Island but the date of this chronicle is regarded by some as suspect and another date is given as 572 AD. His death could well have occurred earlier though with his remains being conveyed to the religious settlement on that island some time after.

Chapter 3 “Legenda novem lectionum de Sancto Daniele Episcopo Bangoriensi”

Peniarth MS 225 written by Thomas Wiliems in 1602 contains the lections and collect for St Daniel's feast day (September 11th) There is a note that the copy was made in 1602 "ex libro manuscripto antiquo" It is believed that the text was actually used liturgically and as the copy was made at Trefriw in the diocese of Bangor, that the source was the breviary used at the cathedral.

(The National Library of Wales has recently purchased a service book (1993), published in Venice in 1494, with hand-written additions of prayers to St Deiniol plus the only known remains of the Dwywnwen mass. The date (according to Dr Enid Roberts) suggests the influence of Richard Kyffin Dean of Bangor and rector of Llanddwyn)

First Lesson

God who is wonderful in his saints and glorious in majesty, willing that his saints should be esteemed glorious and be worthily and laudably venerated by Christ's faithful people does not cease himself to adorn them in wonderful wise with miracles beyond count; among whom our Lord for chose the most blessed Daniel, Bishop and confessor, adorned with the Grace of holiness and notable by his various miracles, as a pastor of his holy Church; and (though) we are altogether unable to relate all the miracles which the same Saviour vouchsafed to work by the merits of the aforesaid Saint Daniel yet some of them we have considered should be made known to your devotion.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Second Lesson

So blessed Daniel, sprung from the noble stock of the Welsh, when he was of full age, having left his native region, desiring to lead the hermit and solitary life to which the better part is promised and, what is more, shall not be taken away, came to a certain mountain, which is now named "Daniel's Mount" near Pembroke in the diocese of Mynyw; considering that that place, because it was remote from the tumult of men was serviceable and suitable for gathering the fruits of divine contemplation, he determined to stay, if God permitted, on that same mountain serving his Lord without interruption.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Third Lesson

The Lord of the place, receiving him kindly, granted him so much of his land as he judged would be necessary for him for his daily support, together with animals and servants useful for agriculture, hut having been built as his home, in the place where now a Church of wondrous beauty and size has been constructed to honour and in the name of the same saint who continued most devoutly to serve almighty God the Creator in fastings, in prayers and other works of piety.

But thou O Lord Have mercy upon us.

Fourth Lesson

In the process of time, the cathedral Church of Bangor being vacant by the death of its Bishop, those to whom in the said Church the election or provision of a Bishop pertained having met together, and the Grace of the Holy Spirit having been invoked, it as divinely revealed that they should send at once to the Pembroke district, and should choose as Bishop and pastor for their Church a certain hermit, dwelling on a mountain on the southern side of Pembroke, and it was added that he was called Daniel.

But thou O Lord, have mercy upon us.

Fifth Lesson

They immediately sent messengers to the aforesaid district. When they came, the messengers found the hermit himself in that very place which we have already mentioned, and the messengers, having first greeted him asked him, " what is thy name?" He on his part answered humbly "I am called Daniel, but am no prophet". Then the messengers, rejoicing with great joy, related in order the reason of their journey and arrival. But he wondering to a degree beyond belief said, " How can this be, that you claim that I am chosen as Bishop, when I am almost wholly unlearned, nor have I any knowledge of letters?" They answered him and said "It is God's will that so it should be" He , therefore, overcome by their urging, and wishing to submit to the divine call, leaving all he possessed, followed them in the name of the Saviour until they came to the entrance of the city of Bangor.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Sixth Lesson

And straightway all the bells of the city were rung without human hand. But when they who were in the city heard the sound of the bells, having gone into the Church and found no one ringing the bells they said one to another, " It is a miracle which the Lord has worked", and immediately , lo the messengers, together with Daniel, already stood at the portals of the Church. Then the Clergy of that Church accompanying the same Daniel to the high altar of the Church and singing most devoutly „Te Deum laudamus praised the mercy of the Saviour. And when St Daniel arose from his prayer, he was so filled with ecclesiastical knowledge of all learning that no one in Wales was then seen like to him in knowledge and culture.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Seventh Lesson

After the due intervals of time, having been duly advanced to all the minor and major orders, he is honourably consecrated Bishop, and is enthroned to the greatest delight also of the people. So, adorned with the Episcopal mitre, he showed himself as loveable to God and to all men. But it would take too Long to relate the miracles which the Lord vouchsafed to work through his merits, both while he lived and after his departure, for they were very many.

On a certain night, while this holy man was dwelling on the mountain of Pembroke, two evilly disposed men came thither to steal the oxen which had been lent to the holy man for ploughing his land, and, having seized the oxen they began to lead them away. The holy man however, hearing from his lodgings the noise of men and animals, saw through a window the thieves leading away the oxen, and, going out, he cried, "Wait, wait a little in the name of the Lord". But they, when they heard his voice, ran the faster, and St Daniel, having made the sign of the cross towards the oxen, lest he who provided them should suffer loss through his praiseworthy act, straightway the thieves were turned into two stones on this very spot, like unto men standing unto this day. But the animals were turned back to their accustomed pastures.

But thou, O Lord have mercy upon us.

Eighth Lesson

Another time, however, when the holy man could not find animals with which to plough his land, behold there came forth from the wood of Pencoed, which was close by, two great stags to the place where the land needing to be ploughed was situated, and, bending their necks to the yoke, they drew the plough all day like tame beasts, and, when the day's work was done, they returned to the aforesaid wood.

But thou, O Lord have mercy upon us.

Ninth Lesson

Moreover, at a certain time the holy man set forth for Jerusalem on a devout pilgrimage. Having gone over the places of the Lord's Nativity and Passion, and having visited the sepulchre in which the Saviour's body had rested, he came to the River Jordan, consecrated by Christ's baptism, and he filled a certain vessel from that water, and brought it with him all the way to the top of the mountain near Pembroke, on which his dwelling place had been built, where there was a great scarcity of water. Having invoked the name of Christ, he thrust in his staff and poured forth the water which he had brought from the Holy Land upon the earth, and straightway the staff grew into a most beautiful tree, and a well of the sweetest water sprang up there, apt for the cure of various sicknesses, if taken as a drink.

Again a certain woman from the district of Caerw(Carew), in the diocese of Mynyw, was so swollen beyond measure that she could find no relief by any advice of physicians. At last, coming to the Church of St Daniel, and afterwards to the aforementioned well, and imploring the saint's help, she drank of that water so as to regain health and, before leaving came to the entrance of the Church, and cast forth from her mouth, while many stood by and observed, three horrible worms, each with four feet, and the woman was made whole from that very hour.

Moreover, the wife of a certain man from the region of Oxford who had Long been blind, having been admonished in dreams through St Daniel, indeed by divine revelation, when she had been brought to the said Church of St Daniel, spent the night there in devout prayers, together with a certain blind chaplain and many others, and both of them received their sight that same night, through the merits of the same Confessor, by the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, who , with God the Father and the Holy Spirit, liveth and reigneth God world without end.

Amen.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Collect of the Same Saint

O God who didst will the blessed Bishop Daniel to be pastor of thy Church: mercifully grant, that we who put our trust in his benefits may, by his prayers, obtain the glory of eternal bliss.
Through Jesus Christ our Lord, who God the Father and the Holy Spirit. liveth and reigneth God world without end.
Amen

Chapter 4 History of the Church up to the 1700's

There is little recorded history of the Church for centuries after the founding of Pembroke by the Norman's. No records appear in the Episcopal Registers of the Diocese of St David's, neither is it mentioned in the list of churches recorded by Giraldus Cambrensis nor on the list of Churches who made payment to Pembroke Priory in 1377

It was not seized as part of the Pembroke Priory possessions in 1414 although it seems to have been transferred with them to the Monastery of St Albans because there is, dated 1480, an entry in the Wallingford Registry regarding that Monastery ,which might refer to it if there was a clerical error, to the effect that the Abbot had granted to the Mayor and Burgeses of Tenby leave to nominate two chaplains in the parish Church of Crowneweare, with the donation of the hermitage of St David's near Pembroke (There appears to be no record of a hermitage of St David's)

In 1484 King Richard III granted to the Mayor and burgesses of Tenby, and their successors "the hermitage of St Daniel's, the lands, obligations and emoluments, the proceeds of which are to be applied for the relief of the poor. To be used for no other purpose than a hermitage" _

The Chapel is recorded in Valor. Eccl (1534) as being a free Chapel with John Griffiths as the cleric. (Libera Capella Sancti Danielis juxta Pembr. Libera capella ibidem ex donacione prioris Pembr unde Johannes Griffith clericus est magister et custos et habet ibidem unam parvan mansionem sive placeam et duas acras terre que valent per annum 8s Et valet in visitacione fractum at sororum ibidem annuatim secundum estimacionem al & c, 10s. Inde decima 12d).

There is also a record dated 1547 referring to John Griffiths
" The parish of Saynt Marie in Pembroke. There is within the said parish one messuage, one garden and iiij acres of land belonging to the fre Chappell of Saynt Danyell, which was taken away from the same by one John Griffith, priest and now (in) the tenor (tenure) of Elynor Rowe. the value whereof by yere X s.

By 1551 (23 Dec.Late Chantries) the Chapel and the land belonging to it, had been leased by the Crown to William Warren

From this time onward the Chapel remained in private hands, the patronage remaining local, a donative not requiring institution by the Bishop though in his nominal control.

The building must have, even after passing into private hands, been regarded as of some importance as it appears on the early maps and is refered to by writers of the period.

George Owen writing in 1603 mentions the Chapel

“In auncient tymes you shall fynde that the rooffes of dyverse churches and Chapells were all vaulted over and that of great height, whereof dyverse are yet standinge as St Danyels Chappell by Pembroke”._

It would appear however that the Church was little used for a century later Erasmus Saunders records

“ Of the manner how our Churches are supplied and served:

and upon this head it is to be observed that there are some churches that are totally neglected, and that very rarely, if at all, have any Services performed in them, and which, if they are not converted to barns or stables, which is the case of many Churches in England as well as Wales, do only serve for the solitary Habitation of Owles and Jackdaws: such are St Daniel’s, Castelhan, Kylvawyr, Mounton Cahpel Cohan and others in Pembrokeshire.”

Chapter 5 A Non-Conformist Church

Soon after 1700 there appears to have been a great shortage of Clergy residing in the area. Many are recorded as holding multiple livings and some did not even reside in the Diocese of St David’s. At one time during this period the Vicar of St Mary’s Pembroke was living in Stoke and the curate of Hodgeston, a Mr Hughes, was taking the services for that combined parish which at that time not only consisted of St Mary’s but also St Michael’s Pembroke, St Nicholas which was partly a ruin, and St Daniel’s.

The Rev. Howell Davies, who became Moderator of the Calvinists in Pembrokeshire, described as a meek and mild man but a very persuasive preacher, was, in 1742, using and restoring unused Churches and Chapels in Pembrokeshire.

In his book on the religious revival in South Wales_ W Gambol records

“Soon Davies had the grant of some parish churches and Chapels in this county, though this not for any affection for the work of God but because Mr Davies served them gladly gratis”

St Daniel’s became one of his chief preaching locations and he is also recorded as administering Communion there. When Davies died, in 1770, on his tomb stone, at Prendergast, are inscribed the names of four of the churches that he restored. St Daniel’s is recorded as being one of the four.

By 1768 Bacon’s Liber Regis was describing St Daniel’s as a Methodist Chapel.

John Wesley had visited and preached in Pembroke in 1763 but when he visited in 1764 and was invited by the Vicar of St Mary’s to preach in that Church, the Mayor objected and forbade Wesley to preach (something that he had no authority to do) . Subsequently, according to Wesley’s diaries, it would appear that Wesley had problems finding a place to preach in the town of Pembroke although he does not appear to have encountered such opposition in Haverfordwest.

In August 1768 Wesley records in his diaries

“1768 August 6th Saturday

“I went to Pembroke. We were here several times before we had any place in Haverfordwest, but we have reason to fear lest the first become last”

1768 August 7th Sunday

"I took a good deal of pains to compose the little misunderstandings which have much obstructed the work of God. At ten I Read prayers, preached and administered the sacrament to a serious congregation at St Daniel's. And the next morning left the people full of good desires and in tolerable good humour with each other.

There must have still been problems for Wesley with regard to preaching in Pembroke for in 1772 (January 11th) the following notice appeared in the Bristol Journal

"The Rev John Wesley AM Chaplain to the Countess Dowager of Buchan is preferred to the perpetual advowson of St Daniel's near Pembroke, by John Barnes, Keeper of His Majesty's Stores."

The Gentlemen Magazine of the same date records among its list of ecclesiastical preferment's:-

"The Rev John Wesley AM: St Daniel's near Pembroke"

As the Church of St Daniel's was in private patronage it made it very difficult for those who objected to Wesley's preaching to stop him both preaching and holding communion services at St Daniel's.

He continued to hold services there right up until his last visit to the area in August 1790 when his diary records the following entry for Sunday 15th

"St Daniel's prayer, Acts XI, 36 meditation, Communion".

The Church must have continued in use by his followers after Wesley's death for Fenton writing in 1810_ describes the Church as:-

"a respectable building with stone tower and spire, yet Long desecrated, and now become a Methodist conventicler" but it was no longer used by them in 1830.

In that year, although the Church was owned by Mr George Bowling , the lease was held by a Mr Joseph Prothero. He rented St Daniel's Church to Rev B Thomas , and Mr David Jones for use as a Baptist meeting house at an annual rent of £3.

The first Service was held on Whit Monday 1831. The interior of the Church was described by the Rev William Walters on that day:-

"As one stood in the old fashioned pulpit, the Communion table was behind, and over it, on the centre, a large painting as an altar pieces. On either side were the tables of the law and belief. The congregation was generally good, gathered from the villages south west."

A Baptist Church was constitutionally formed there on September 17th 1832 and Mr John Roberts was ordained minister, but fourteen years later the congregations had dwindled and services were discontinued.

The Church was still claimed by the Church of England and the Rev R C Roberts expressed surprise that the Baptists had been allowed to use one of the oldest places of worship in the county for divine services.

In 1849 St Daniel's Chapel was purchased from Mr W Bowling and Mrs Bowling by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for £275.

Since that date it has mainly functioned as a mortuary Chapel with the only regular service being on September 11th - St Deiniol's Feast day.

Dreadful accident and loss of lives at Pembroke Dock.

The town of Pembroke was, on Monday evening last, the scene of one of the most alarming accidents which have occurred here for many years past. From the particulars which have been ascertained it appears that about six o'clock in the evening a party consisting of women and lads and children about 14 in number, were returning from a hay-field in Lamphey Lane in a waggonette drawn by one horse. The horse and vehicle were the property of Mrs Truscott of the White Hart Inn and when they had arrived nearly opposite the Dragon Hotel the belly band gave way and the horse began to kick. This so alarmed the women and children that they began to scream and this means so frightened the animal that it took off at a furious pace down towards the Lion Hotel and from there up by the Old Castle. Here P.C. Davies (No 24) attempted to stop the animal but was unable to do so and also got much hurt in the attempt, the shaft having struck him in the side. From thence the animal continued its career over the steep and sinuous Westgate Hill and eventually struck the vehicle against the old parapet wall of the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel when both horse and vehicle got turned completely over.

In this terrible crash a young woman about 17 years of age named Dorcas Ann Truscott, a daughter of Mr W H Truscott of the " Red White and Blue" Inn Quay Pembroke was killed on the spot, while her younger sister, named Olwin Lavinia, age 14 years received a frightful scalp wound, sustained such other serious injuries that she is not expected to survive. Ann Moy, a widow , about 60 years of age - so dreadfully injured that her death is momentarily expected. A lad named John Haran (who was driving the horse at the time) and his sister - both seriously injured. A woman named Elizabeth Williams - much injured. Lettice James, a woman who jumped out before the vehicle was turned over, very seriously injured. The whole of the other occupants including an infant in arms, are more or less injured. Dr. H P Jones and Dr Reid were at once in attendance and rendered all the medical assistance they could

NB. The Truscotts came to the area in 1820's from Cornwall and had a reputation as smugglers -- one member of the family ages about 12 was shot by a revenue man while escaping from a boat in Pennar Gut.

Shown on Speede's Map of 1610 appears to be a ruined Chapel or house on the site now, land map of late 18c shows two fields marked as St Anne's also artefacts in St Mary's Church which Rev Colin Bowen says are not in keeping with the rest of the building advertised in the Link Magazine to see if any further information. Baptists Mount Pleasant

The Baptists were the last of the four principal Nonconformist denominations who entered this ancient town for the purpose of establishing a religious cause, Among its pioneers were, Thomas

Saunders, who was afterwards a deacon of the Church for fifty years ; and George Brown who also served for a Long period as deacon of the same Church. These, with a few other loyal Baptists, hired a small room adjoining the entrance to St. Michael's Church, and opened it for Divine service in April, 1831, G. Devereaux, (Pembroke Dock).acted as first minister. To him, the Church was greatly indebted for the untiring interest and fostering care which he exercised preaching to that little flock every Sunday afternoon, until his death in 1833. The gradually increasing congregation necessitated more extensive premises, and the building formerly used by the Wesleyans was secured. A Church, composed of twenty members was duly formed on April 1st, 1833, and Mr. Henry Williams, a member of Llangloftan Baptist Church, was ordained its first pastor. There was also at this time another Baptist Cause in St Daniel's Church but services were discontinued there in 1846

Services continued in the old Wesleyan Chapel until 1859, when due to the increase in congregations a new Chapel capable of holding 320 members was built this proved to be inadequate and the present Chapel was built in 1878 capable of holding 600 with 2 schoolrooms, class rooms and a vestry. The debt of £2500 was paid off by 1888

Independents Tabanacle Chapel

Original Cause began in 1691 but because of the neglect of the minister of Albany Haverfordwest after 1743 the congregations dwindled greatly but was revived again in the early 1800's believed that they originally met in the house behind York Tavern. A Chapel was built in 1812 and in 1867. During the period 1802-1843 over 500 people were received as members but unfortunately the records are missing.

Primitive Methodists Castle Back.

Between 1823 and 1830 a society was formed which used a room fitted out as a preaching room at Castle Back. Records for this Chapel exist from 1847 to 1902 (PCRO)

Calvanistic Methodist westgate

The first Chapel originally called Bethel was built in 1826 with the later Chapel being built in 1867. The cause owes its origins to the preaching of the founders of Methodism at St Daniels and the cause moved from there into the town before 1810. In 1845 there were 66 members.

Wesleyan Methodists Wesley Square Chapel

There was a movement here formed in 1763. John Wesley personally held the living and took services at St Daniel's and a Chapel was erected in the town in 1790 with a second , much larger one being built in 1822.. Membership in 1818 was around 46. This Chapel was finally closed for worship in 1982 and is now an antique shop although funds have recently been allocated to restore it.

Houses in the area

Alleston

In 1382 it was known as Aylwardiston, which developed into the present form. During the first half of the 17th century it was the home of the Webb family, and in 1640 was held by the brothers Thomas , Richard and Alexander Webb. The original owner was Sir John Carew of Crowcombe Court, Somerset, and in 1605 Edward Webb agreed to surrender a lease on the property to Sir John, but with the right to occupy it till 1608, to preserve deer in the park, to kill two bucks, and to leave `400 sheep with 40 other cattle' to Sir John. Thereafter it was owned by various families such as Davies and Poyer, and in 1904 by the Owens of WithyBush, and let to farming tenants.

Bush

In Hasgurd Church, near Milford Haven, is the tomb of Katharine, daughter of Owen Barrett of Gellyswick, who married Dr. Rowland Meyrick J Bishop of Bangor, and died 1593, leaving four sons and two daughters, of whom the eldest, Sir Gilly Meyrick, Knt. (probably named after the ancestor who named Gellyswick), was a sufferer for his faithful adherence to the unfortunate Earl of Essex, Elizabeth's discarded favourite; they were boys together and firm friends through life, sharing the fate of the Scaffold on Tower Hill in 1601. It was from Sir Gilly that the Meyricks of Fleet, near Pembroke, were descended, who took so active a part in Cromwell's siege of that place in 1648; and also the Meyricks of Bush, near Pembroke, the later seat of the family. The original stock of the Meyrick family is of Bodorgan, Anglesey, Thomas Meyrick of Bush, Sheriff in 1828, married Jane, great-granddaughter of Brown Willis, the antiquary. Their only daughter, Jane Sophia, married St. John Chinerton Charlton, esq., of Apley Castle, Salop. Thomas, second son of St. John and Sophia, inherited Bush, and took the name of Meyrick; on his elder brother's death he inherited Apley also; he was created Baronet in 1880. On 8 January 1866 the Bush mansion burned down but most of the valuables and portraits were saved. The mansion was rebuilt in 1906. It later became part of the old Grammar school and then a nursing home. The site is said to be haunted by Judge John Meyrick who died in 1732

Golden. Pembroke St. Mary's.

North-east of the town, across the river from the town. From 1603 to 1825 the Cuny family were associated with Golden and for short periods lived at Lamphey, Welston, and Pembroke. The Cunys came from Staffordshire, the first to come to Pembroke being Walter Cuny, whose son and heir, Richard, signed his pedigree for Dwnn in 1613. Some eight generations of the family remained in the county for two and a quarter centuries; seemingly the last in the male line was the Rev. John Powell Cuny, rector of St. Brides who died unmarried in 1820-25. On Colby's map of 1831 are marked Golden Hill and adjacent Golden Farm.

Grove. Just south of Pembroke town.

In the late 17th century Grove became the seat of the Lloyd s, descended from the ancient family of Lloyd of Morfil, Cilciffeth and Cilgelywen. After Thomas Lloyd married Frances daughter of Hugh Philipps of Eastington, he settled at Grove as his main seat. He was High Sheriff in 1700, and died not Long afterwards, being succeeded by his son and heir, also named Thomas Lloyd. The second Thomas served as High Sheriff in 1709, and died in 1711. His widow Mary then married Morgan Davies of Cwm, Carms., and enjoyed Grove until Mary died in 1752, aged 70. Thomas Lloyd left daughters and co-heiresses, one of whom, Elizabeth Lloyd married in 1725 Sir William Owen, 4th Baronet of Orielton. Fenton wrote in 1811 "Grove as well as Morfil, in consequence of the late Sir William Owen becoming entitled to a share of this property by his marriage with one of the co-heiresses, and having purchased the shares of the others, form part of the vast possessions of Orielton."

Grove thus passed to the Owen family who abandoned it as a residence, and it became a farm. By 1786, Sir Hugh Owen, the then owner had let the property to three tenants.

In the 16th century this was home of the Voyle family. In 1788 Captain Charles Tyler, R.N. lived here with his wife Margaret, daughter of Abraham Leach of Pembroke with their large family. He ended up being Admiral Sir Charles Tyler of Cotterell, Glamorganshire, and died in 1835. Colonel Owen Lowless was living here in 1977 but sold it in the following year to Mr. James Barrett who turned it into a private hotel.

Education

Grammar School

In 1690 Griffith Dawes " in consideration that a good grammar school was to be kept by some able person of the Protestant religion professed by the Church of England in the town of Pembroke for ever thereafter for the education of youth and the encouragement of such schoolmaster" granted a rent charge of 20s a year on a certain house. On the same consideration Rev Morgan Davies (or Dauids) of Cosheston gave money to produce 40s a year. Sir Hugh Owen gave 50s a year and the Corporation gave the toll of corn. The school was held in the Shire Hall for 130 years approx. Pembroke grammar school ceased to exist in 1820 when the Shire Hall burned down

1839 according to Lewis

A grammar school founded here in 1690 has an endowment of £11 3 4d per annum arising from various bequests of rent charges by Sir Hugh Owen, Bart. Morgan Davies and Griffith Dawes, and from a sum in lieu of the corn –toll granted to the master of the Corporation at an earlier period. No school is now kept as the shire Hall in which it was held, was pulled down in 1820; but a master is still appointed by the mayor and council.

1847 Pembroke – The State of Education in Wales

An account of the free grammar-school is given in C.C. R., p. 669. Under the present arrangement so small an endowment as £11. 3s.4d. is utterly useless. It might possibly applied with advantage either to increase the master's stipend in a primary school, or as an exhibition for a pupil-teacher. The borough extends into the parishes of St. Michael's on the east, St. Mary's on the north and Monkton or St. Nicholas on the south and west. Pater or Pembroke Dock is made a district out of St. Mary's parish.

At the time of my visit the only school of public institution in the borough of Pembroke for the poor was the National school hereafter reported. A British school was being talked of, and a committee has been formed. At a public meeting, recently held, the sum of £2000 been promised to be paid by instalments of an equal amount during the ensue 5 years. In the address of the committee it is stated, as ascertained by a canvas from house to house in Pembroke and its immediate neighbourhood, that there were upwards of 500 children without even a nominal education. In these canvasses, however, children of all ages are included under 15, and Sunday-schools are not taken into account. The Rev. Mr. Davies, Independent minister of Golden, near Pembroke, considered that in and about Pembroke there was a general carelessness on the subject of education, and that, as regards religious knowledge, the people were inferior to those in the Welsh districts. 'The Sunday-schools are fewer, and worse attended. This inferiority mould particularly apply to that part of Pembroke and its vicinity which lies in Monkton parish to the south and west. The range of the good day-schools at Stackpool and Warren (cf. these parishes in Castlemartin hundred,) hardly extends as far as, this district: but the eastern side is, to some extent, within distance of the school at Lamphey, and the northern within that at Pater. The superiority of these day-schools compensates for the absence of Sunday-schools.

The condition of the population improves in proportion as they come within the influence of the dockyard. Pater exhibits all the symptoms of a thriving and active place. Besides the National school there, I found a large British schoolroom nearly completed. In the opinion of one of the promoters of the latter school, there was still a vast mass of children in Pater not receiving daily instruction. Supposing primary education to be established in Pater upon a sufficiently wide and satisfactory basis, the promotion offered by the dockyard school for apprentices is admirably calculated to maintain and raise its standard. It might well be worthwhile considering how far some local and officially recognised connection might be established between the two the prevalent and popular feeling, at the time of my visit, was, that apprenticeships were obtained by political interest. I had some conversation with the master of the Apprentices' school, apparently a most intelligent man. He said that it was difficult to realize, except by experience, the backwardness or rather utter absence of secular education in Wales. He found his own exertions, as head of a secondary school, in considerable measure crippled by it. The vocabulary and ideas of the great majority who came to him were limited to such as expressed nothing beyond a few religious notions and the immediate objects of the sphere in which they had moved. The style of the Scriptures, their only reading-book, did not enable them to read with intelligence the most ordinary work upon subject of common information. Such was the experience of a man who was coming into daily contact with what are rather the elite of the Welsh labouring classes in an English-speaking part of the country.

Union Workhouse School.

I visited this school on the 16th of December. The master had at one time been a soldier, and his whole regime and phraseology were of a military character. I was introduced to the school by Captain Leach, the Vice Chairman of the Board. As soon as the schoolmaster had been apprized of our object he tolled a great Bell, and when the summons had been answered by the appearance of a boy or two in the yard, called out lustily, "Come, turn out there-fall in." This was very readily done. "To the right-face-March ". Each boy in passing gave a military salute. One of the file had neither shoe nor stocking; scarcely any of them had stockings. There was a deep snow on the ground thawing at the time.

The schoolroom is well lighted and ventilated, boarded, and in excellent repair. Everything about it was very neat and clean. along one side was a line of desks and opposite to them a stove with a good fire of culm. By the door there was a cupboard for books on the left hand and a small square table for the master on the right. he appeared a very respectable old man, kind and intelligent, with a good-natured sharpness of manner, such as children would soon understand and be kept alert by, without being cowed or frightened. He gave the order, "Fall in with your Testaments." I heard 19 children read to him the 14th chapter of St. Matthew. He paid great attention to them and corrected any mistakes made, except desert for desert, which he did not notice. He then put questions. He spoke clearly and distinctly. The children for the most part answered. The master then gave the children a word apiece to spell from the passage read; most of them spelt correctly. A boy pointed out to me the river Jordan, Jerusalem, and the Dead Sea (after a little puzzling) on the map of Palestine, which hung upon the walls.

The master then took the boys and gave them a lesson in arithmetic. They wrote down correctly in figures from his dictation three thousand four hundred and twenty-five, they added, rapidly and correctly. His best pupil then worked £ 61 14s. 2d. x 34 in a very clear and steady manner without making a mistake, under my inspection. Only 3 of the 19 children in the first class had been in any other day-school. The matron instructs the girls in sewing. I heard from Captain Leach that the old master takes great delight in drilling his boys, and that they are tolerably expert in manoeuvring. At the time of my visit the snow had choked up the boys' yard, and so spoilt his parade-ground. The effects of discipline appear to have been good both on master and pupils. I was much pleased with the school.

William Jones's School.

This school is kept in a back room of the master's dwelling house. It is in good repair, but ill lighted. The furniture consisted of one square table, three long desks seven benches, and two chairs, but no map or print of any description. The master appeared to be an intelligent man. Most of the scholars are tradesmen's mechanics', and (a few of them) labourers' children. Few were present owing to the snow. The sixth chapter of St. John's Gospel was as read tolerably well, but the master said that he is not in the habit of questioning them on what they read.

In arithmetic they set down 600, 6,000, 60,000, 600,000, 6,000,600, and 600,600,600,
 $6 \times 6 = 36$; $8 \times 8 = 64$; $5 \times 6 = 30$; $7 \times 7 = 49$; $5 \times 12 = 60$; $5 \times 9 = 45$; $4 \times 12 = 48$;
 The copy-books were tolerably well written.

Mrs. Streets School:

This school is held in the dame's kitchen, which is kept very clean, and the house and furniture are in good repair. The room contained three benches, five chairs, and four tables, with various articles for domestic use, but no cards, prints, nor maps of any kind. The mistress said that she had first set up a school to support her family in her husband's illness, and had kept it on ever since. Her scholars are mechanics' and tradesmen's children, but few of them were present owing to the snow.

Questions proposed by the mistress on the chapter Read (the 2nd of St. Matthew) correct. answers were given but did not know why Christians keep the first day of the week holy- Nothing~ beyond reading and sewing are taught in this school.

National School.

I visited this school on the 15th of December during a deep snow.

Until within the last 4 years it used to be held for boys and girls separately, under a master and mistress; 100 boys and an equal number of girls attended. By the falling off, however, of subscriptions, in 1842, the two schools had to be reduced to one.

The present master's wife receives £51.a-year for teaching the girls sewing.

The building contains the master's house and two large and commodious school-rooms. The upper one only is now used for a day-school; the lower one was formerly the girls' school-room. The girls' Sunday school is now held in it. I found only 10 children present. The master heard 6 of them read the 2nd chapter of Genesis, and questioned them from that chapter : they answered correctly.

Spelling performed as a separate lesson. I heard him give them a sum in subtraction in class. The children worked the sum viva voce, each one performing a single step of the subtraction. He appeared to me to have a good method of teaching, and to avoid anything like slurring. The writing was fair. The out-buildings were fully sufficient and in tolerable repair. One part was said to belong to the boys and another to the girls, but there was no actual separation.

Mr. William Abram's School:

This school is kept in a room of the master's dwelling- a house, which is in tolerably good repair, except parts of the floor and walls. It contained 9 benches and 1 table, with some of the arithmetical tables of the Infant School Society hanging on the walls. They are in verse, and are sung occasionally by the scholars. The master was in school himself until he was 9 years of age, and learnt spelling and reading well. At this time he was afflicted with a fever which deprived him totally of the use of his eyes. Shortly afterwards he learnt the trade of weaving sedge-mats, by which trade, and by playing musical instruments at weddings and in public-houses, he got his livelihood. About 10 years ago some benevolent gentlemen bought for him the Elementary Book for the Blind, Literacy for the Blind, the Psalms, and the Four Gospels (all published in Glasgow). He soon learnt to read by the embossed characters, and his neighbours recommended him to open a school, which is well attended. At first he taught the alphabet by the embossed characters to his pupils, but as soon as a sufficient number had learnt to spell and read, he made these act as monitors for the alphabet classes, and confined himself to the classes in spelling and reading. Spelling is taught simultaneously by him in this manner :-

he directs one of the best scholars to give out a word, which is spelt at first by one pupil, then he and all the rest spell it together and so on with a column or page, giving the meaning of the word also after it is spelt correctly. He appears to be a shrewd man, and possesses a retentive memory. His wife assists him in school. Most of his scholars are labourers' and mechanics' and (a few of them) tradesmen's children. The inclement state of the weather permitted very few to attend. The master said his object was to teach spelling and reading to his scholars, and that he does not ask them many questions on any subject. Before leaving the school the master read parts of the 7th and 8th chapters of St. John, very correctly. He could also turn to any chapter. He cannot write, and does not profess to teach anything beyond spelling and reading.

Mrs Thomas 's School.

This school is kept in the ground-floor of a dwelling-house, which is in good repair.

The furniture consisted of one settle, six chairs, five benches, and five tables, and other articles for domestic use. The mistress teaches only reading, writing, and needle work.

Most of her scholars are labourers' children, and few only of them were present, owing to the inclement state of the weather. '

The 17th chapter of St. John's Gospel was read, but not well, except by one.

The mistress said they were not accustomed to be questioned on what they read. They could answer no questions on what they had Read.

The copy-books were not well written.

Mr. George Wogan's School

A room on the first floor in the master's dwelling-house is the schoolroom. There was a fireplace there, but no fire.

The furniture consisted of two square tables, two chairs, six benches, many of them broken, and supported with stones. The master is an old sailor, and does not profess to teach anything beyond reading and writing. His scholars were labourers' children; I observed two of them without stockings, and one bare footed. The 15th chapter of St. Luke was read, exceedingly well by several,

The copy-books were ill written.

Church Sunday School.

On the 20th of December I visited the above school. It was held in the National schoolroom, and conducted chiefly by Miss Phillips, the Vicar's daughter and other ladies of Pembroke. There were present at the time of my visit 60 girls. One class was composed of girls from the ages of twelve to seventeen inclusive, and was reading the book of Job. They all read with ease, and the questions put by the teacher were readily answered. Another class was reading the 8th chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel—they all read very well.

Another class was reading the 13th chapter of St. John's Gospel: some of them could read very well. There were two other classes reading the Testament. Indeed, these could hardly be called reading-classes, for it was very little better than spelling. The teachers of both these classes told me that they did not question them much upon what they read, their object being chiefly to teach them to read, so as to be enabled to join the higher classes, to which they were promoted according to their proficiency.

I also observed a group of little girls reading the Third Class-book of the Sunday-school Union.

Weslian Sunday School.

-On the 20th of December I visited the above school. It was held in the Chapel, which was a large and convenient building. The children attending the school were all under 15 years of age. The number present at the time of my visit was 26 males and 23 females, out of which 16 were reading elementary books. I went round the different reading-classes: all the children read very fairly. The superintendent told me that the reason of there being so small a number present was that a great many of them had gone to the funeral of one who had been a leading man in the Chapel.

Haggars Cinema

Strange name for a cinema you might think but “Haggar” is a family name and the founder of the family fortunes was William Haggar born in 1851 in Dedham Valle in Essex. He was to become one of the pioneers of the British Film Industry and following an early apprenticeship as a ship-wright and already an accomplished amateur musician he fell in love with a young actress, Sarah Walton, married her in 1871, joined a company of strolling players and so embarked upon a theatrical career.

Sarah's family had been theatricals as long as anyone could remember and she was reputed to be capable of playing any of the women's parts in Shakespeare without rehearsal. She trained her new husband as a comic actor and during the years that followed they traveled throughout Great Britain playing in portable and permanent theatres, and, in their spare time, producing a family of eleven children, all of whom were reared to the stage.

They first came into Wales in 1890 via Chepstow and loading their theatre on to horse-drawn wagons they followed an itinerary through the coal valleys and down into the agricultural counties of west Wales, visiting Pembroke for the first time in 1893. The travelling theatre was a familiar feature of Victorian life and brought a welcome dash of excitement, colour and entertainment to the lives of the small towns and villages of the Principality with its repertoire of variety, song and the popular melodramas of the day such as, "Maria Marten and the Red Barn" "East Lynne", "The Dumb Man of Manchester" and "The Maid of Cefn Ydfa".

William Haggar became an accomplished photographer and supplemented his income by taking portraits and framing them. In 1896 when the theatre was standing near the new docks being built at Port Talbot he visited Cardiff to view an exhibition of moving pictures staged by the pioneer, Birt Acres. The experience galvanised Haggar into action, it was as though he instinctively sensed the future of this new invention. He purchased a projector and a small collection of films and after experimenting with this unfamiliar and dangerous equipment he built a small ground-booth christened, "The Windsor Castle Theatre" and attempted to bring this revolutionary form of entertainment to the public at large. The children formed a band to play outside and provided sound effects with a Kettle drum but the venture was not an immediate success. The people would not come in, they had no idea what moving pictures were. In desperation Haggar gave a free show and this ploy changed his fortunes; the crowds flocked in and at the end of business on his first night as he counted out £20.00 in pennies he looked up at his son and said sagely. "I knew there was money' in it".

Haggar handed the live theatre over to his eldest son, William (Jr), and set out to make his living with his new Bioscope as it was called at the time. Business, however, was not as good as expected. In 1899 Wales was in the grip of a coal strike and times were hard for the people of the valleys. The competition was fierce, he had led the way but other showmen followed and set up their own shows. Furthermore, the actuality films he showed were crude, simple and repetitive; they were what the showmen called "oncners", the public would pay to see them, but only once. Haggar realised that something more sophisticated was required.

In 1900 he visited the offices of the Bromhead brothers of Gaumont in London and bought himself a camera and five hundred feet of film. He was about to embark on a new career as a film producer. He possessed certain unique assets: he was a skilled photographer, he owned props, costumes, scripts, and had a company of actors trained from the cradle; most important of all he had spent a lifetime in the theatre, he was a man of the people, a showman, he knew what the public wanted and he set out to give it to them.

His first film was of a train arriving at and leaving Burry Port Station and he followed this with several short films including a film of the Boer War shot in the Rhymney valley; his version of a battle in the Russo-Japanese War, which was reputed to have been shown in Japan purporting to be genuine footage; a phantom ride taken on the Mumbles Railway in Swansea and a chase film "Patrick pinches Poultry". In the summer of 1901 he made a film of the old Welsh melodrama "The Maid of Cefn Ydfa" starring Will Haggar Jr and his wife Jenny. It was shot on stage in seven short scenes and ran for fifteen minutes. This was one of the first fictional story films ever produced and it literally made William Haggar 's fortune, on the first night it was shown at Swansea Fair it took £40.00, in the parlance of the industry it was "sensational". In 1902 at Maesteg Haggar made a chase film, "The Poachers" which sold 350 copies and was shown Throughout Europe and the United States. Critics now affirm the family's belief that this was the seminal "chase" film and was the precursor of the great Hollywood "chase" films which followed in the subsequent decades.

In 1904 in Pembroke Dock with his sons Walter and Jim and daughters Lily and Violet in the leading roles, William made the film "The life and Death of Charles Peace", the story of a Victorian desperado and now one of the oldest extant story films. Many of the Haggar films were filmed in the Pembrokeshire countryside including a film of the landing of the French at Fishguard shot in Llangwm using the fisher-ladies as the women of Fishguard; a thriller "Message from the Sea" was filmed in Milford Haven; a crime drama filmed at St. Catherine's Bridge near Haverfordwest, a comedy at Neyland and "The Bathers revenge" on the western Cleddau. Between 1900 and 1912 Haggar made sixty films including melodramas, comedies and series. His films were remarkable for their structure, action and the innovative quality of his camera work. He can quite legitimately be regarded as one of the founding fathers of the film industry.

These films brought prosperity to the Haggar family and the early home built Bioscope was replaced by a purpose built Organ front of French manufacture, resplendent in gold leaf with mechanical figures and illuminated by hundreds of coloured electric bulbs, these structures were the pride of the late Victorian steam fairs up until 1914.

The Haggar family stood with their Bioscope outside the Wesleyan Chapel in Pembroke from 1901 to 1914. By then, however, the travelling Bioscope was already being replaced by permanent cinemas in all the larger towns and it was superseded by the industry it had pioneered. The Haggar family were to establish theatres at Llanelli, Aberdare, Mountain Ash, Merthyr and later at Pembroke, Pembroke Dock, Fordingbridge and Lyndhurst in Hampshire, Hayle and Delabole in Cornwall, Winchcombe in Gloucester and Arundel in Surrey.

The first permanent cinema in Pembroke was situated on the North Quay in Ford's Yard opposite the Castle. It was not a permanent structure but a grounded Bioscope belonging to Gideon Roberts and his wife Sarah nee Ford whose daughter Ada had married William Haggar's son Walter. They stayed there through 1914 and 1915 providing their own electricity with their portable steam traction engine. More permanent was the cinema established in the 1920's in the old Drill Hall and Assembly Rooms, later the site of Haggar's cinema by the Rees-Phillips family.

The Assembly Rooms had been built in the 1860's as a centre for the social activities of the town and during its life-time has served a variety of purposes including a drill-Hall and shooting range for the 4th Battalion Welsh Regiment (volunteers), the headquarters of the British Legion whilst above was the ballroom and a masonic temple. The ballroom was an elegant structure, the dimensions of which were the same as the Pump Room in Bath with much moulded plaster-work, gold leaf, tall elegant pilasters crowned by Coats of Arms and vast ornate gold framed mirrors. It provided an appropriate venue for the social activities of the gentry who kept their town-houses in Pembroke and the aspiring middle class.

In the 1930's William Haggar (Jr), his wife Jenny Lindon and their family moved to Pembroke following the destruction by fire of their cinema in Pontardulais. They rented the ground floor of the Assembly Rooms from the Rees-Philips and established a cinema naming it in the family tradition "Haggars". William and Jenny had spent the best years of their lives on the stage and were beloved by audiences Throughout Wales. It was inevitable that their cinema should also offer live theatre. They presented many of the melodramas which had been the stock in trade of their theatrical career and it was said that when they presented Haggar's second version of the "Maid of Cefn Ydfa", which was silent, they would stand behind the screen and provide the dialogue to the spectral figures before them. At the end of the show the family would line up at the exit of the cinema and wish their patrons "Goodnight".

William Haggar (Jr) was a fine man and an impressive actor in the Victorian tradition, he possessed a resonant voice dressed immaculately in tie, tails, red lined cape, homburg and silver headed cane. He and his family contributed a great deal to the cultural life of Pembroke at the time and gave unstinting support to the amateur dramatic and operatic groups in the area.

On William's death in 1937 the cinema was run for a short time by his brother Walter and was then acquired by William Haggar's grandson Leonard in 1939. A young man, ambitious with a strong sense of the history and tradition of the family Leonard was able to purchase the property and set about its modernisation. He opened up the front, building a new entrance and canopy so that it now looked like a real cinema. The auditorium was redesigned and redecorated and the cinema was reopened promptly to be closed again, albeit temporarily, victim of the outbreak of war.

Leonard could not have restored the cinema at a more propitious time. Pembroke and Pembroke Dock had suffered grievously during the years of the depression following the closure of the Royal Naval Dockyard in 1926; the tourist industry was in its infancy and agriculture was in a depressed state. The war revived the military and naval pride of the area and with Milford Haven vital to the national effort in the Battle of the Atlantic the dockyards were once again vibrant with activity. The flying-boat squadrons were reinforced in Pembroke Dock, airfields were constructed Throughout Pembrokeshire, troops were stationed in the Castle and the old Mill and servicemen of all arms and from every corner of the world were posted into the county. The centre of entertainment in Pembroke was Haggars 's with the latest Hollywood and British films, and on many Sundays a Church or service concert, was staged, memorable occasions, which gave the opportunity to local people and servicemen to reveal their talent. The "lovers" seats in the back row were invariably booked by the Sunderland crews and their favourite film which they demanded and got was, "Goofy (Walt Disney's dog) learns to fly".

After the war "Haggars" prospered in what was to prove the hey-day of the cinema industry. The Ballroom was restored and became, once again, the centre of social life in Pembroke and a restaurant was opened. There are many older couples in the area now who in their salad days met at the Saturday night dance in the Ballroom and celebrated their wedding at Haggars.

As the years pass, however, public tastes changed and the coming of television heralded the decline of the cinema. "Haggars" lasted longer than most but eventually it had to succumb to Market forces and the cinema was closed. The name lives on, however, and the building is still referred to as "Haggars" by those with memories. "Haggars" certainly played a part in the history of Pembroke in the 20th century and its connections with the family and William Haggars (Snr.) also link it directly to the history of the British Film Industry.

Buller Peter 1841 Pembroke Mayor WWHR

Burley Roger 1486, 10 November

Acts before the Rev. father Hugh aforesaid in his manor of Lantfey of the diocese of St Davids had and begun on 10 November in the year as above and continued day by day in a Pembroke cause of an error or heretical pravity against one Sir Roger Burley of Ireland then present For which Sir Roger indeed the same Rev. father - because Sir Roger himself as the said father asserted on the relation of faithfulmen had been and is notoriously and in manifold ways defamed with him and evidently and on probable conjectures suspected of and upon divers errors, opinions, and articles savoring of heresy met expressly contrary to the determination of holy mother Church by himself Sir Roger held and publicly spoken and preached, as was said - peremptorily fixed, appointed, and assigned a day on Saturday next after the feast of the Conception of the blessed Virgin Mary next then following namely 9 December then next, to appear before the same Rev. father in the Chapel of the blessed Virgin Mary situated within the said manor of Lantfey to answer upon such errors, opinions, and articles, as is aforesaid, then to be objected against him to the mere correction of his soul, of the mere office of the said Rev. father and also on information, and further to do and receive in that behalf what shall be just, there being then present there Master Gely Richard Canon of Abergwilly College, and William, prior of Pill, with other discreet men besides who were there When indeed the Saturday abovesaid was come, the same Sir Roger the Irishman appeared for trial in person in Chapel aforesaid before the said Rev. father then sitting in judgment for a tribunal and thereupon the same Sir Roger when required made oath on the most holy gospels to the said Rev. father in regard to speaking the truth and answering Faithfully upon all points then to be objected against him and enquired of from him concerning and savouring of the matter of errors or heresy Against this Sir Roger the Irishman indeed, so sworn, for the mere correction of his soul the same Rev. father of his office objected and articulated the articles underwritten Which articles indeed follower and are these,

First of all that the same Sir Roger in presence of one Master ap Ris John in the house of White Nicholas of Pembroke there being then present there the said Nicholas White and his wife White Katharine by name, Tyler Thomas, of Tenby and Baret John with some others then present, publicly arguing with the said Master John said that he would and could make the Lord's body in the time of the mass for those present and for himself those bones would be Bread alone Also that contrariwise he would at his pleasure sometimes make it as far as related to himself and not to those present Which articles indeed, together with other errors besides obstinately adhered to there in the presence of those afore written, he then confessed that he had said, which errors, truly, together with all errors against the Faith and definition of the Holy Roman Church, in writing, before the Rev. father aforesaid and his commissary there namely Master ap Owen, Lewis doctor of decrees and archdeacon of Cardigan, with all the others then called to this, he publicly abjured in form following-

In the name of God, Amen!

I, Sir Roger, chaplain, now of the diocese of St David's before you Hugh etc Thomas e heresies and errors which of late before Master John ap Res and others then present I obstinately asserted and cherished in the house of Nicholas White at Pembroke etc I verily abjure and the said erroneous articles and all other articles whatsoever, erroneous and contrary to the holy Faith, and all heresies, here in these writings and expressly, I humbly and devoutly renounce, supplicating the Rev. fatherhood to deign to impart unto me the benefit of absolution from every sentence of excommunication passed by the holy fathers against such wanderers, subjecting me to every correction and reformation whatsoever adequate to and of right required on account of the premises

And him the said Rev. father absolved in due form of law and enjoined on him a fitting penance in that behalf which he faithfully fulfilled publicly in the Church of St Mary , Pembroke

“Dreadful accident and loss of lives at Pembroke Dock Pembroke 23 July 1866

The town of Pembroke was, on Monday evening last, the scene of one of the most alarming accidents which have occurred here for many years past From the particulars which have been ascertained it appears that about six o'clock in the evening a party consisting of women and lads and children about 14 in number, were returning from a hay-field in Lamphey Lane in a waggonette drawn by one horse The horse and vehicle were the property of Mrs Truscott of the White Hart Inn and when they had arrived nearly opposite the Dragon Hotel the belly band gave way and the horse began to kick This so alarmed the women and children that they began to scream and by this means so frightened the animal that it took off at a furious pace down towards the Lion Hotel and from there up by the Old Castle Here PC Davies No 24 attempted to stop the animal but was unable to do so and also got much hurt in the attempt, the shaft having struck him in the side From thence the animal continued its career over the steep and sinuous Westgate Hill and eventually struck the vehicle against the old parapet wall of the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel when both horse and vehicle got turned completely over

In this terrible crash a young woman about 17 years of age named Dorcas Ann Truscott, a daughter of Mr W H Truscott of the " Red White and Blue" Inn Quay Pembroke was killed on the spot, while her younger sister, named Olwin Lavinia, age 14 years received a frightful scalp wound, sustained such other serious injuries that she is not expected to survive Ann Moy, a widow , about 60 years of age - so dread fully injured that her death is momentarily expected A lad named John Haran who was driving the horse at the time and his sister - both seriously injured A woman named Elizabeth Williams - much injured Lettice James , a woman who jumped out before the vehicle was turned over, very seriously injured The whole of the other occupants including an infant in arms, are more or less injured Dr H P Jones and Dr Reid were at once in attendance and rendered all the medical assistance they could Extract from the Haverfordwest and Milford Telegraph newspaper July 25th 1866

Had it not been for Mr Williams presence of mind and courage Canon Bowen could hardly have escaped instant death' The award was published in the London Gazette of 18 July 1919 <http://www.Pembrokeshire-war-Memorialcouk/indexhtm>

(c)1992,updated1995,1999,2013, 2017

In the forty five years I have been researching the history of Pembrokeshire I have made many friends and without their help the Jottings would not have been possible. One very special friend who allowed me to copy many of the maps and early pictures and also provided much information was Mr Jimmy Meyrick Owen and I shall always remember his help and encouragement. John Hogg and I both spent hours talking about old Pembroke Dock and he obtained copies of old maps which he gave me. Vernon Scott not only helped me and advised me, he gave me copies of photographs and helped me with my spelling, format and grammar. John Worley with the Photographic Exhibition Great friends – what more can anyone say.

Thank you all

Basil H J Hughes

[Original spelling kept]

Pembroke Dock. Before 1814

Until 1875, what is now Pembroke Dock, consisted of two distinct areas -- the land to the north of the Barrack Hill which later was held by the Paterchurch family and the land of the South - East Pennar -- which had once been held by the Jestington family of Eastington.

I have been told that the Paterchurch family was an old Norman family who came with the Conqueror but there is no trace in the Battle Abbey roll

Prior to 1396, when the old Earldom of Pembroke, lapsed much of the Paterchurch land was actually the Manor of the Grange of Kyngeswode held by the Earl. What role the Paterchurches played is uncertain as they don't appear in any of the early roles as holding land from the Earl either by knights fee or more likely as tenants as were the Adams family, but they must have been a respected family as they appear as jurors in several important cases relating to land.

Giraldus Cambrensis in the late 1100's recorded a list of Churches in the area but St Patrick's Church does not appear.

There are no records either that I could find of the name earlier than 1287 when a witness to a charter of Gilbert granted by a deed at Langum the farm called Russelsland to Philip the son of Roger and to Alice for their lives was David de St Patrick.

A David de Ville Pattricii also appears as a juror on the inquisition as to the lands belonging to Joan de Valance Countess of Pembroke dated September 20 1307.

These records do not give any clue to where they actually lived nor is there a mention of a Church.

On the 20th August 1324 there was an inquest on the death of Aymerde Valence who had held the county of Pembroke with all its appurtenances and which detailing his holdings in South Pembrokeshire.(IMP Edward II files 84 and 85)

These consisted of the Castle and Town Pembroke, the Grange of Kyngeswode, the manor of St Florence, the commote of Castlemartin, the town of Tenby and also 25 and a half Knights fee's. The name de Patrick nor any variation appears neither on the jury nor on the list of land holders.

I am mystified by Patent Roll 27 Edward III Pt1 M27d (Cal p447) 1353 detailing a complaint of Thomas son of Richard Wryyot regarding his holding of one Knights fee in Orieldoune and KilPatrikeston – is there any connection ? Is that the original spelling of Kilpason?

In 1362 we have the first record of the family holding land and using the name Paterchurch. David Paterchurch held with three co-parceners half a knights fee at Sageston and Williamston Harvill (half a knights fee could be about (acc to Owen) 600 acres of good land one quarter of that 150 acres and land was situated in Carew Parish well away from the Paterchurch itself?)

In the early eighteen hundreds there was no trace to be found of the present town. Acc to Kelly's Directory 1884 “there was originally a farm with a house and Church, then designated “Paterchurch,” There was a farmhouse, the old mansion in ruins, a partly completed fort but mostly fields and meadows with the occasional cottage and lime kiln on the shore.

The very early history

Romans

It has been stated by a Bishop of St David's that the Romans never venture further west than Carmarthen as no tiles or brick, no Roman villas have been found but several large hoards of coins have been discovered in Pembrokeshire.

Recently however evidence that the Romans did venture further west than Carmarthen has been found. A Roman road linking Carmarthen with Llawhadden which carried on even further west just past Wiston was found. Parts were uncovered during the building of the Whitland bypass and a Roman fort site at Wiston.

The earliest remains that have been found in the area, that is now Pembroke Dock, are Roman coins

Coins of the reign of Claudius Gothicus (268 to 270 AD) and of Constantious II (337 to 361AD), now in the National Museum of Wales, were dug up in a garden in Military road Pennar and other coins were reported to have been found in the same immediate area. [I was shown some of these old coins kept in an old tobacco tin by a very old resident of Military Rd Mr Phillips who said his father had dug them up in his back garden but they were going to be given to his grandson who 'lived away' He said some had been found when the houses were built but were claimed by the Saurin estate – I could not find any references or trace in either the Orielson or Saurin records of these coins nor coins found at Angle]

This could be an indication that the area was the site of a native fortified settlement or look-out post as the entrance to the Haven was visible from there.

Mason has recorded the uncovering of the remains of a stone build road with a stone lined ditch by workmen clearing the site for South Pembrokeshire Hospital.

It can only be a guess as to how the coins came to Pennar.

Was there native fortified settlement on the headland which could have given early warning of danger to the Roman fleet, a native settlement who traded with the Romans, or did someone dropped their purse?

One thing we do know there was plenty of in South Pembrokeshire, was Saints but most of them wandered off to other places to spread their teachings, (were they seeking a more receptive audience)

One local saint who it is believed held land in the area was St Teilo According to The Landaff records he held land at Amroth and also Llanion. His mother is reputed to have had a settlement on Goldern Hill; one pronunciation of her name was Gawden

Pennar

How old is Pennar?

When I first started to collect information on the area I was told that “Pennar does not go back very far, it is not as old as the Dockyard”. As I soon found out, Pennar is far older.

The name, Pennar, suggests, a Celtic origin Pen: chief, head, end or top; pentir – headland. If this is correct then the name predates the Norman influence in the area.

But man has lived in the area from earliest times; 11,000 years ago, when the climate was very cold and dry after the last Ice Age, hunting mammoths, reindeer and horses he lived in a cave just the other side of Pennar Gut. A man of the New Stone age also lived (and died) in the same cave. It was home to a Bronze Age carpenter and it was used by man up till Norman times and maybe later.

If there were any remains of very early civilisations on this side of the Pennar Gut they have long been destroyed by the farming and the military development of the area.

The earliest remains that have been found, as I have said, were are Roman.

According to Ptolemy the Celtic tribe who lived in the area at the time were the Demetae. It is suggested that they co-operated with the Romans because the Romans defeated the Demetae's traditional enemy, the Silures. The Romans, it was suggested by that Bishop, therefore would have no need to erect forts in the area.

Just over a thousand years ago the land in this area belonged to Hywell Dda King of Wales. He had a court at Whitland and is remembered for ordering the Welsh Law to be written down, laws under which women had more rights than they do today.

In 948 AD Hywell Dda gave land in this area to his favourite grandson Jestyn ap Owain ap Hywell Dda. This grant of land included what is now known as Pennar. Jestyn lived on the site of Eastington Farm then called Jestynton and his family continued to live there and hold the land even after the arrival of the Normans until an heiress married a Norman. (Did this happen with Paterchurch, was the land originally held by a Welsh family like at Jestynton and a very early heiress married a Norman like Princess Neste married Gerald de Windsor?)

Early Pennar

Although the Normans invaded England in 1066 they did not venture into Wales till 1093. William the Conqueror did make a pilgrimage (or was it a spying trip) to St David's, but, according to the Domesday book there appears to have been an agreement between William and Rhys ap Tewdwr, King of Deheubarth, of which this area was a part, that Rhys would retain his authority in his own Kingdom. Rhys' daughter Nesta was sent to the Norman court as surety for Rhys continued loyalty, where she conceived at least one child by the future Henry I.

Rhys died in 1093 opening the floodgates to the Norman conquest of the area and the Normans under the Montgomery's then set up the Marcher Lordship of Cardigan and Pembroke. Gerald de Windsor was appointed Custodian of the Castle of Pembroke by Arnulph de Montgomery, but lost the post when Arnulph and his brother rebelled against the King and a knight named Saar was appointed.

Arnulph pleaded with the King for a pardon and was told that the King would pardon him when he appeared before him with his head in his lap, so Arnulph retired to France.

Gerald de Windsor, who had taken no active part in the rebellion, went to the King Henry's court where he married Rhys's daughter the beautiful Nesta, Princess of Wales. She owned Carew Castle and large estates in her own right. Nesta, who had several children by different fathers (including King Henry), is credited as being the ancestor of most of the major families of South Wales. Certainly many of the major leaders in the invasion of Ireland were descended from her and one of her grandsons was Giraldus Cambrensis.

Among the many Normans and Flemish who came to this area was the Perrot's. In 1183 Sir Stephen Perrot, who had been Custodian of Narberth Castle, but had lost it to the Welsh, married Elen, daughter and sole heiress of Merchion ap Rhys ap Rydderch ap Jestyn of Jestynton (Eastington). through this marriage the Perrot's came to hold land in the area which included that of Pennar.

The Perrot's continued to live and hold the land in this area for many centuries. A Stephen Perrot is mentioned in Edward III's reign. His son John Perrot died on the 13th January 1349 and in his will it is mentioned that he held the lands of Pennar. The estate was inherited by Peter Perrot who married Alice daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Harold (the Perrot's seem to have had an eye for wealthy heiresses) thus vastly increasing their estates and from this time Haroldstone near Haverfordwest became the family home. Peter is mentioned in the Close Roll dated 1377.

Pennar is recorded as Estpenr in an Inquisition post mortem of 1363 and as Le Estpennr on 1379 and as East Penarth in the 16th century.

In 1531 Henry VIII confiscated Carew Castle after beheading Rice ap Griffiths the holder. He granted the governorship of the Castle to Sir John Perrot "of Haroldstone and Jestynton". Sir John was the natural son of Henry VIII and Mary Berkeley (Lady of the Bedchamber) wife of Sir Thomas Perrot of Haroldstone. Sir Thomas it was who introduced pheasants to Pembrokeshire but "they preferred everyone else's estates to his". When Sir John died in the Tower among the list of his estates Pennar is mentioned as well as "Lanbeath". The land he held by inheritance was returned to Sir John's heirs and the Jestynton estates became the dowry of his daughter Anne when she married Sir John Phillips, Sheriff of Pembrokeshire in 1595.

In 1570s under the authority of Queen Elizabeth I, Christopher Saxon surveyed the whole of England and Wales. His map of Pembrokeshire is dated 1578 and East Pennar is marked on that Map as is also Paterchurch and Ferryhouse (Pembroke Ferry).

East Pennar and Paterchurch are also recorded, later in 1610, on the John Speede Map of Pembrokeshire.

George Owen writing in 1595 mentions the Oyster industry of Pennar.

"Pennar Mowth is the creeke that cometh up to Pembroke town, this being the greatest and largest creeke in all Milford it passeth up into the land 3 myles. The Crowe is a hollow or shelf a pretty way within the entrance of Pennar Mouth and it is an oyster bed and on the Crowe groweth one of the best Oysters of all Milford being a bigg and sweet oyster, the poore people thereabouts are greatly relieved by the oysters there for upon lowe water the bed is drye and the people gather the oysters there without any dredge or other helpe of boate”.

The Jestynton estates which included Pennar were handed down to Hugh Phillips the third son of Sir John Phillips. Hugh’s daughter and heiress Francis (also referred to as Abra) married Thomas Lloyd of Morvil and moved to Grove. Thomas Lloyd ’s son, also called Thomas Lloyd , by his second marriage (to Elizabeth Powell) was succeeded by an only daughter who on 12 December 1725 married William Owen MP of Landshipping (later Sir William Owen of Orielton). He acquired all the Lloyd estates including the land of Pennar and rebuilt the house at Orielton.

The register of Hearth Tax, Pembroke Town, for 1670 shows that the land of Pennar was leased to a Jenkin Ferrier who must have been quite wealthy, the house was quite large (the old farmhouse) by the average of the times as recorded in the Hearth Tax because tax was payable on 4 hearths. The Ferrier family were quite influential having connections around St Florence and also being related to the Colby family, they also took an active part in local affairs and in 1769 James Ferrier of Pennar was Mayor of Pembroke.

The Land tax register of 1786 shows that the tenant of Pennar was a Mrs Ferrior and that land tax of £2 10s 0d were payable on it. This compares with £1 1 0d for Paterchurch.

Benjamin Ferrier was the tenant in 1791 and another Ferrier of Pennar, Simon, died at the Battle of Waterloo leading his regiment, the 1st Lifeguards, in a charge for the eleventh time although already badly wounded.

Another pre 1814 Pennar family were the Prices.

Thomas Price of East Pennar was Mayor of Pembroke in 1666/7. Morrice Price was listed in the Hearth Tax records in 1670 and there is a memorial on the outside of the west wall of the tower of St Florence Church to John and his wife Ann Price of Pennar. He died in February 1803 at the age of 102 she died in August of the same year and she was 104. Surely this must have been one of the longest marriages on record. Their son Richard was buried on 13 April 1842 he only reached the age of 99 and another Price, David kept the Dolphin Inn at Llanreath Point and had contact with the first boatload of people who came from Milford to mark out the site for the new Dockyard at Paterchurch in 1813, he reached the age of 96.

Many of the old cottages, not being built of very substantial materials, have disappeared over time. Apart from the hamlet at East Pennar there was also a cottage occupied by a man named Jacob Williams near what is known as Jacobs Pill and some in the middle of a field called Sycamore.

The “main” road into Pennar, before the construction of the Dockyard in 1814 was from Pembroke. Today it is only a narrow path. It starting on the north side of the Pembroke River at the Green, went past St. Anne’s Chapel and when on to East Pennar Farmhouse (The Old Farmhouse, Ferry Rd) with branches of it along the way leading to Imble and Hill farms. At East Pennar Farmhouse it passed the farm buildings and the hamlet, through some fields to the west until it reached a cottage in the last field before Pennar Mouth then on to the Point itself. In the early 1800s this part of the path was still in existence although Farm Gates and stiles had been installed in the field boundaries. This was the road which was used by the Oyster Fishermen some of whom lived at East Pennar others at Pembroke. There was also a road leading southwards from Pennar Farm known as Watery Lane which lead onto the Pennar Gut at the Pennar Ridge. This Ridge enabled the river to be forded at low water allowing carts full of farm produce to cross easily. A footpath over what is now Barrack Hill but was called Redland connected Pennar with Paterchurch farm.

Pennar After 1814:

But first what about events on the Continent?

Col. Samuel Ferrior of Pennar died at the battle of Waterloo [his regiment 1st Life Guards] and although wounded it is said he was leading his regiment in a charge for the eleventh time when killed. His son Col. Charles Ferrior died 13 June 1863. He had served in India for 28 years.

1814 The fortunes and development of Pennar from 1814 were closely linked to that of the Royal Dockyard at Paterchurch, later Pembroke Dock.

At first most of the labour force consisted of men transferred to the new yard from the old one at Milford who travelled up the Haven from Milford by boat and landed just inside Pennar Gut where the boats could float at all stages of the tide, left the boats there in the care of an old woman, Bessy Bradley who lived in the cottage by the Point and walked over the Hill via Mr. David Prices public house "the Dolphin" and then to the Dockyard. Mr Price had a marvellous orchard and brewed his own beer but there was a suspicion that it was well watered as no fights ever took place because of it.

1816 the new Yard was expanding rapidly and more men were required. Work in the other major Royal Yards was slack and there was an immigration of large numbers of skilled tradesmen and their families, from the other Royal Dockyards, about 1816 necessitating a massive house building programme. Houses were erected as fast as possible many by the dockyard workers who worked on them after a day's work in the yard, but even so some were occupied before they were completed and many were of very poor standard.

1830 According to Mrs S. Peters the majority of the older houses in Pennar were built about 1846 but the Ordinance Survey Map of 1839 based on a survey of 1830 shows that houses were already in existence in Upper St. (now Castle St), Middle St (Grove St), Front St (Fleet St), Military Rd, and North St (Owen St).

1822 The South part of Barrack Hill, what is now Cross Park, part of Pennar Farm, Sykemore and TreOwen were purchased from Sir John Owen in 1822 by the Admiralty (51 acres in extent).

1830 This they then exchanged for 13 acres of land owned by the Ordnance Department.

1967 The Barracks and the land attached to it were sold by the Ministry of Defence to the District Council and leased by them for a period of 60 years to the South Pembrokeshire Golf Club.

1870 Pennar became part of Pembroke Dock and, at that time, was a thriving community with shops, pubs, places of worship, several smallholdings and allotments. The Orielton Estate map shows that by that time most of the older houses in Pennar were in existence and the road connecting Military Rd. with Pennar Point, for which the Admiralty purchased two acres of land in 1862 from the Orielton Estate, was built although the road into Pennar was in a very bad state. In 1884 there were two bakers and grocers.

Mr William Lifton of Military Rd. and

Mr William Malley who also kept the sub post office,

Mr William Phillips, jun. of Military Rd., Pennar was a coal Merchant and general carrier,

Mr William Phillips, Snr. was a beer retailer, while

Mr David Nicholas kept the Royal Oak public house,

Mr John Williams, the Kilwentage,

Mr Robert Court Griffiths, the Commercial Inn and

Mr Henry Banner, the Swan Inn.

1856/7 The Orielton Estate, of which Pennar was a part, had been purchased by Miss Jane Martha Jones of Cilwendeg with part of the compensation money for the sale of the Skerries Lighthouse in Anglesey. On her death this estate and the Cilwendeg Estate passed to her niece Margarette Sutton Saurin, wife of Mark Antony Saurin. Part of the estate included the ferry from Pennar to Bentlass and all the houses which were let, leasehold, in the main to dockyard workers although later some were leased to military personnel.

1926 The closing of the Yard in 1926 hit Pennar hard. Many of the skilled craftsmen left the area, unemployment was rife and there was less opportunity for the trade training of the young men of the area as well as the loss of the educational excellence of the Royal Dockyard School. Even before that time the reduction in employment had been so drastic that the Mayor had organised events such as half a mile of pennies and Fêtes and Galas to raise money for the unemployment fund.

1928 Pennar school held jumble sales to raise money for the Boot fund and up until the mid 30s there were many cases of school girls of that school officially recognised by the Education Committee as suffering from malnutrition.

Free School milk came in 1935 and school dinners 1943.

1926 From 1926 with the arrival of the Royal Air Force the employment situation improved with ancillary work becoming available and an increase in the spending power because of the new base opening up. Many more houses were built to accommodate the Service personnel.

After the war and the closing down of RAF P/D, there was once again much unemployment. Many of the old houses were in need of improvements, over 2000 had suffered bomb damage, many had no indoor facilities. (Mine first had a flush outdoor WC. connected to mains sewerage pipe laid through our backgarden in 1947 and an outside tap as the main water supply.) About that time there was a large estate built by the Council to ease the shortage of housing and later under the Housing Act of 1957 most of the old cottages of Lower Pennar were demolished, as well as some in Military Rd, and new Council houses built. Some of the surplus R.A.F houses in Stranraer Rd were purchased by the Council others were sold to private owners. The Orielton estate gradually sold the leases of the plots it owned, the last being sold in 1989 at an auction in St Patrick's Church Hall and most of old houses throughout Pennar have now been modernised.

Industries of Pennar.

The main industries of Pennar were concentrated on agriculture and fisheries. An old description gives a picture of ,what is now, Barrack Hill golden with grain. When the sun is bright in the very early morning it is still possible to see where the old field boundaries used to be as well as some of the old paths.

Fishing.

1600's Oysters were an important export from the Haven by the 1600s when large quantities were sent either overland or in "barks to Bristow". Some of the finest oysters came from Pennar Gut.

1592 A typical cargo of 20,000 is recorded in the Port Books as going to Barnstaple. The trade continued right up until the 1850s when the beds seemed to die out possibly killed by river pollution from the industries and increased population of Pembroke and Pennar. Shipments went to Ireland, Bristol, Liverpool, Holland, and Lisbon.

1674 John Powell sent oysters to London as "thank you" to Sir Robert Clayton for his assistance in procuring the post of "Comptroller of the Customs in the Port of Milford Haven".

Even as late as the nineteenth century, trade in oysters from Pennar was large, the Cambrian Register of 1818 records that the oysters from Pennarmouth were famous. Very large quantities were pickled and sent to Bristol and places further afield.

1719 The quantity and the quality attracted the attention of foreign fishermen; in 1719 the Deputy Vice Admiral for the County of Pembroke (William Lloyd) wrote forbidding them from fishing in the branches and in the Haven itself. The foreign ships were of “great burden” and “employed many other fishing boats to dredge for the same oysters whereby to lade there several ships therewith and the same to export out of His Majesty’s dominion”. An early example of factory ship fishing?

Quarrying.

There was extensive quarrying of limestone between Pennar and Pembroke. According to Morris in 1743 - “The Navigation up this river to Pembroke Town is much impeded by the rubbish of the Limestone quarries being thrown into the River; which ought to be remedied, or the Place will be stopped up in the Process of Time.” “Within Pennarmouth a Dock might be made which would contain all the vessels in England and which would be perhaps the greatest thing in the world of that kind”

The main requirement for limestone was for the manufacture of lime as fertiliser and mortar although some was used for building.

Farming.

Before 1812 the main farm in the area was situated near what is now Gilgal Terrace off Ferry Rd, the “old Farmhouse” which is several hundred years old. There was a cluster of buildings between there and the foreshore, and it was on what was then the track to Pembroke, across the fields passing the site of St Ann’s Chapel to the Green. The farm had its own limekiln at the end of what is now Fleet St. There was also supposed to be another small farm at the west end of what is now Military Rd. and a smallholding at the end of the continuance of the track past the old Farmhouse by the Pennar Point.

1814 After 1814 houses were built on much of the farm land but many small holdings sprang into being. The Orielton estate leases show that many of the tenants of the houses leased areas of land to farm, much on annual tenancy. Quit notices were served on at least seven in 1861, among who were Aaron Longhurst, William Morgan, George Thomas Husband, Thomas Mabe, and James Glanville.

Mr Samuel Jenkins of the Victoria Hotel is recorded as leasing 36 acres, part arable, and part permanent turf in 1857.

Shipbuilding.

There is very little information available before 1814. Many small ships and boats would be needed for the oyster industry and other fishing; these would have been on the foreshore, as required, by the users. Certainly there was shipbuilding in the Gut in the 1700s with records showing ships being built at Bentlass but the only major Shipbuilding Yard was that established on a site at Jacobs Pill in the late 1800s.

1874, the Milford Haven Shipbuilding and Engineering Co. Ltd (Jacobs Pill) leased land and Properties from the Orielton Estate. This Company had a very impressive Board of Directors including Admiral Lord Clarence Paget as Chairman, Sir William Brett as Secretary, Mr E. Reed MP, E. Barry RA, J. T. Emmerson JP and J. Hall. One Ship built there was a corvette for the Japanese Navy, the Hei Yei launched in 1877, and another was the Acorn. The last work carried out at the yard was the building of a caisson for the Admiralty.

1885 The Company went into liquidation in 1885. As part of its liquidation settlement, the Company assigned to the Orielton Estate the foreshore rights in front of “Front St”Pennar which it had acquired from the Board of Trade.

Up till the 1880s the road connecting Pennar with Pembroke Dock was little more than a mud track a “bitter experience on dark damp nights” and down to Lower Pennar and the Ferry was described as “a double source of danger and disgrace”.

Soon after a decent road was constructed with the main aim of conveying goods and manpower to the new Torpedo store at Pennar Point.

Pennar Military Torpedo Store and Magazine

1875 The Government constructed a Torpedo store and magazine close to the shore near Pennar Mouth in 1875. Torpedo trials and submarine Mining experiments were carried out here. The site was also used to store all the equipment necessary to mine the Haven. This site was later utilised by the army.

The site of this Government Torpedo depot after the second World War became Pennar Park holiday camp - now defunct.

Llanreath Tank Farm

With the change over from coal to oil as fuel for the fleet an Oil Storage depot was erected towards Pennar Point. This was bombed during the Second World War, with tragic loss of life. The remainder of the storage Tanks were removed in the 1980s and the site has now being converted into an extension of the Golf Course.

Pennar Chapels and Churches.

Pennar was, until the 1840s, part of the Parish of St Mary's Pembroke. The nearest place of worship would have been, in earlier days, St Anne's Chapel, a small Chapel and place of pilgrimage on the old track from Pennar to Pembroke. It is marked on the Speede map of 1610 and on the French “spy” drawing of 1650. Alternatively the inhabitants of the area could go to Monkton Priory or St Mary's Church either along the track or by boat.

The earliest place of worship in the area although not in Pennar proper was Bethany Baptist Chapel built in 1818, which originally had its own graveyard although this was closed in 1824 allegedly because it was affecting the water supply of the town. The Chapel was lit by tallow candles which smoked and one record commented about the wicks having to be trimmed before the start of the Sermon. At the time the Meyricks who owned most of the land where the present town centre is built, were not in favour of non-conformist places of worship but the Owens who owned the land of the Pennar area allowed a Chapel to be built on their land. This led to very early development of the Pennar, High St area.

Originally at the top of what is now Tregennis Hill was Bethany Square with large houses around it, the Caledonia Inn with a kilted Scotsman as its sign and the Cambrian. Most of this was demolished with the building of the Defensible barracks. In the early days of the town Bethany Square was one of the important places of the town where the people met and talked in the summers evenings

Gilgal Baptist Chapel Pennar

Early in the 1860's the Rev. W B Bliss, Minister of Bethel Baptist Church, Pembroke Dock and Mr. David Jones one of the Deacons felt that there was a need for a place of Worship in Pennar. The old cowsheds of the Old Farmhouse Lower Pennar on the right hand side going down Ferry Lane were converted into schoolroom and Chapel. It is the site of what is now Gilgal Terrace as the old building was later converted into dwellings by Mr. Scourfield. This original Chapel and schoolroom was opened for Worship on April 27th 1862 and the first service was taken by the Rev. Bliss. A Sunday School was started on May 4th with Mr. David Jones as Superintendent, it started at 10am went on till noon, restarted at 1.45pm till 2.45pm and was followed by a "preaching service". Such was the demand that 60 names were enrolled on the first Sunday. According to Findlay the Chapel would accommodate 200 to 300 people. The first few months were exceptionally busy with the first service on June 1st of the first Pastor, Rev. T D Mathias, He opened and conducted a day school which started on July 7th. On the 19th October a Baptismal service was held when eight members were immersed "in the tide" 1862 The Church was officially formed on November 11th 1862 when Mr. David Jones, Mr. William Lewis, Mr. Thomas Powell, Mr. David Gay and Mr. Issac Jenkins were elected Deacons, and it was admitted to the Pembrokeshire Association in 1867. 1868 The Rev. Mathias resigned in June 1868 and over the next seventeen years, four ministers served the flock, Rev. James Williams for two years, Rev. Henry Evans for three years, he had been a shipwright in the Dockyard where he had held short religious services in the lunch break before taking up the Ministry full time. Then after a space of three years came Mr. William Casnodyn who then went as a pastor in Patagonia. He was followed by Mr. Elias Evans.

The old building had become too small for the congregation and was also in need of repair.

1885 When the Rev. T Pandy John became Pastor in 1885 the members decided that a new building was necessary. A site was leased in Nelson St where the present Chapel now stands, the foundation stone of the new Schoolroom was laid by Richard Cory of Cardiff in 1887.

1887 The present Chapel was opened in 1887 and was much larger than the old one being capable, according to the specifications, of seating 550 people. The cost was £950.

1893 Six year later the Rev. John left Pennar for Barry and was succeeded by the Rev. David Davies. At that time the Chapel was in debt due to the building costs and the Rev. Davies organised the first of the Eisteddfod's held in Pembroke Dock, the profit considerably reducing the Chapel debt.

1889 Unfortunately, because of ill health, he had to resign in 1899 and he died in Swansea on September 27th 1900.

1900 Rev. T Williams of Bangor College became the new pastor in 1900 and acted as Mayor's Chaplain in 1904-5 when Alderman W Phillips, one of the congregation, became Mayor of the borough.

1912 At the end of 1912 moves were made to obtain a grant from the Carnegie Trust for an Organ Eventually these efforts were successful, and on June 4th, 1913, the instrument (from the Sweetland Organ Building Co., Bath) was dedicated, the guest organist for the ceremony being Mr. M. S. Maurice Popplestone, F.R.C.O.

1915 The Rev. T. Williams married a Church member, Miss Jessie Jonas, and they were both greatly missed when they left in September 1915, to take the Pastorate of Maesyrhelem and Pound Churches in Radnorshire. For many years Mrs. Williams had been a faithful Sunday School teacher, and she continued to support her Husband most competently during the whole of his Ministry.

1916 The Rev. D. T. Davies, of Bethel, Loveston, became Pastor in 1916. He was extremely well liked by both young and older members, keenly interested in all spheres of Church life, and a great leader of the people during a very difficult period in the history of the Church, for his Ministry continued Throughout the 1914-1918 War and its aftermath.

A number of young men fell in action, and their names, together with those of all the others who enlisted, are recorded on a memorial tablet in the Chapel.

1918 In 1918 another of the young men of the Church entered the Ministry. The Rev. Ernest Cole, became Pastor of Great Horwood Baptist Church. After many years of distinguished service in the Baptist cause, he became Pastor Emeritus of Penrallt Baptist Church, Bangor.

Later, during a nation-wide depression which led subsequently to the closure of H.M. Dockyard in 1926, many families left the town to seek employment elsewhere. Church records call attention to the unprecedented times which resulted in the depletion of both officers and congregation. Those remaining were asked to face the situation with courage. Church appointments had to be deferred as again and again still more families departed; the Minister's salary had also to be reduced.

1922 repairs to the building had to be neglected, and affairs were generally at a low ebb. Every effort was made to keep the spirit of the Church alive, and the Minutes of the Annual General Meeting held in January, 1922 reveal that the Church had engaged in Lawn Tennis activities which proved a highly satisfactory way of keeping the young people together.

1927 The Church suffered another crushing blow, however, in 1927, when after a long illness, the very much beloved Pastor passed away at the early age of 37 years. There is a tablet to his memory on the North wall of the Church. His widow who had entered fully into the life of the Church, later became the wife of the Rev. Bleddyn Howells, Pastor of Broadhaven before moving to Melton Mowbray, but upon his death in 1949, she returned to Pembroke

1927 There followed a short period of Ministry by a former Pastor, the Rev. T. P. John, who had retired from his Church in America. Still full of spirit, Mr. John worked to secure the freehold of the Church, and this was achieved for the sum of £43. New Trustees were appointed, Mr. J. Scourfield and Mr. J. Edwards being the only two of the original ones left.

Mr. John was, however, dogged by ill-health from the beginning of his second Ministry, which began on July 17th, 1927, and ended with his enforced retirement on May 27th, 1928. He passed away on July 9th, 1928, to the very great sorrow of the Church.

1928 Next came a period, June 1928 to February 7th, 1932, when no pastor was appointed, but services were conducted by lay preachers and visiting Clergymen. The Rev. Glyn Davies of Puncheston, Evan Davies of Aberkenfig, J. Lamb of Milford Haven, W. P. Thomas of New Quay, and W. Jenkins of Roch, officiated at Baptismal Services.

1932 Early in 1932 the Church invited the Rev. Gus Thomas of Howey, to the Pastorate, and he opened his Ministry on the first Sunday in February.

Both before and after entering the Ministry, Mr. Thomas devoted a great deal of time and energy to the Christian Endeavour Movement, and it would be true to say that he was largely responsible for keeping the movement alive in the town during the 1914-1918 War, for he was no stranger to Pembroke Dock when he came to Gilgal. During the Great War, while serving with the R.A.M.C., he was stationed at Llanion Barracks and contributed much to the religious life of the town, 1935 In a statement delivered to a Church Meeting in 1935 by Mr. T. Masters, a senior Church Deacon the Church was declared to be in good heart, with no debt of any kind substantial sums in hand £22 in the Building Fund, over £40 in the Church Fund while three years' contribution to the Substantiation Fund had already been paid.

1939-45 Mr. Thomas was minister during the World War of 1939-45. Many young men, and women too, were away serving in the Armed Forces. some were directed to other areas on work of National importance while the civilian population suffered considerably from enemy bombing. Many families were evacuate. The Church members, however, played their full part in the many welfare and air-raid precaution activities in the town.

1940 During this time the Schoolroom was taken over by the Admiralty for the billeting of sailors who came as fire-fighters when Pennar Fuel Tanks were set on fire by enemy action.

1945 At the cessation of hostilities, persons who had served in the Forces, and had a connection with the Chapel, were given a sum of money from a Welcome Home Fund set up by the members.

1944 The Rev. Gus Thomas suffered a great deal of ill-health for a number of years and retired in 1944, though he continued to live at Rose Cottage, near the Chapel, until his death in 1961. The people of Pennar remember him especially for the quality of his sermons, his vigour, and his undaunted cheerfulness in times of adversity.

They remember, too the devoted service of Mrs. Thomas, whose charm and friendliness endeared her to all.

1948 the Church appointed the Rev. J. I. John, student at Cardiff Baptist College. He remained until June, 1951 when he accepted a call to the Mount Calvary Baptist Church, Swansea.

One of the features of his short Ministry was the publication of a Church Magazine which he personally edited. The Secretarial duties were carried out by Mr. J. Phillips.

During this time electricity was introduced into the Church and various improvements were carried out. The Choir, depleted and finally abandoned through the period of depression and two World Wars, was resuscitated, and several recitals given.

The Church owes much to Mr. John, whose youthful enthusiasm and untiring efforts in every phase of Church work were an inspiration to his Officers and congregation.

1951 The Rev. Davies, of Llangwm, was next to be invited, and he began his Ministry on Oct 4th, 1951. He was already well known to the people of Pennar, having preached there on a number of occasions and officiated at Baptismal Service at times when there was no Pastor.

Mr. Davies, a man highly esteemed in Non-Conformist circles, had already ministered with distinction at several Churches in Pembrokeshire and Monmouthshire. After training at Myrddin College and the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, he became Pastor of Yncheston and Beulah, Little Newcastle, leaving later for Mount Pleasant, Pembroke, and thence to Hope, Cross Keys, where he also took up Y.M.C.A. work, achieving marked success among the troops. At the end of the war, he returned to Pembrokeshire as Pastor of Galilee, Llangwm.

At Gilgal, Mr. Davies was an indefatigable worker, his frequent visits to the sick and elderly being particularly appreciated. The great interest he has always taken in the teaching and training of the young has not lessened. Throughout the years, and in this, as in all he did, he had the unfailing support and able assistance of his wife, Gilgal greatly values the contribution she made to the life of the Church.

1953 Mr. Davies became President of the English Assembly of the Baptist Union in Wales and Monmouthshire, and in 1957 he held similar office in the Pembrokeshire Baptist Association, having previously served in an executive capacity with both bodies for many years, and preached on a number of occasions at their Meetings.

Mrs. Davies was President of the Women's International Day of Prayer Committee, and was for ten years the Secretary of the Pembrokeshire Branch of the Prayer Union of Ministers' and Missionaries' Wives, representing Pembrokeshire at the Annual Conferences, including one in Switzerland. She had on frequent occasions, occupied the pulpit of many Pembrokeshire Churches.

Mr. and Mrs. Davies had also entered fully into the life of the town, and were members of the Old Peoples' Welfare Committee and of the Friends of the South Pembrokeshire Hospital Committee.

During Mr. Davies' Pastorate, a new heating system had been installed in the Church, and plans for large Scale repairs to the fabric of the building, and for extensive interior decorations were carried out by two contractors, members of Gilgal. Mr. T. Scourfield and Mr. A. Grieve.

Wesley Chapel Pennar.

1820 There had been an early Chapel (Ebenezer) near Bethany Corner. It was very small but had a gallery in which the choir sat. It was demolished at the building of the Barracks.

1860's In the late 1860's a site was leased from the Orielson Estate at the corner of Nelson St. and Gays Lane and in 1870 what was according to Findlay " a small plain building accommodating about 120" was erected.

1871 A Certificate of Registration was made out on 28th February 1871 signed by the Rev. Herbert Wesley Haime of Pembroke, the Wesleyan Methodist Minister. 1871. The Chapel was actually registered for Worship on 5th March 1871.

1893 the Chapel was closed for renovation and reopened on the first Sunday in August when the Rev. Theodore Bishop was asked to conduct the reopening service. A schoolroom was built as part of these renovations. At that time some of the trustees were Mr. G W John, Mr. A Berry (who was also Chapel Steward), Mr. W Skelton, Mr. B Osmond, Mr. E John, Mr. W HaskLey, Mr. C W Lawrence, Mr. W Smith, the Secretary was Mr. E Taylor and the Minister the Rev. R Bryant.

1897 (2nd September) it was agreed to build a house on the ground adjacent to the Chapel, and leased to the Trustees, for a Chapel Keeper. Permission had been given by the Orielson estate office in a letter dated 5th August 1897

A regular pattern of worship continued for many years but, with the closure of the Dockyard, attendance's dwindled and instead of having their own Minister, services were conducted by the Minister from Wesley Chapel, Meyrick St. Pembroke Dock. The trustees meetings were also held at Wesley Chapel, Meyrick St.

1933 it was decided to suspend Sunday evening services.

The property was still leasehold and the Trustees made inquiries as to the possibility of purchasing the freehold in 1935 but the future was looking bleak.

1936 On the 25th February 1936 a meeting was held at the Meyrick St. Chapel when Mr. J Price BA Chapel Superintendent "expressed with regret the closure of the Chapel" in Pennar and said that he hoped in the near future to have a service or more every month.

1937 By October 20th 1937 it had been agreed to close the Chapel, to surrender the lease for the Chapel and the house to the Orielson estate and to dispose of the contents. The Pulpit and Organ were sold to Waterston Chapel for £1 each.

St Patrick's Church.

1850's the Rev. George Edward McHugh (curate of the parish of Pembroke Dock) married the daughter of the Chief Constructor of the Dockyard, J I Fincham, son of the author of Fincham's book on Naval architecture. On his retirement he lived with his son in law and daughter. He died in a riding accident opposite the Pier Hotel Pembroke Dock and was buried in Cosheston Churchyard. They came to live, at first, on plot 547, what is now No.1 Military Rd, which was leased to St John's Church for £100, there Rev. McHugh used to hold a Sunday School and "cottage lectures". Mr William Cole played the harmonium at these meetings.

Findley indicates that the building was used as a Church as he says

1875 that Pennar District Church is a small plain building under the control of the Curate of Pembroke Dock capable of accommodating 100

1877 the Rev. G F Kelly, Vicar of Pembroke Dock, died and Rev. McHugh left the parish. The new Vicar, Rev. F G M Powell, because the numbers attending the "cottage lectures" and Sunday School were so great, felt there was a need for larger premises and, as a temporary expedience, had a wooden hut built in the house grounds at a cost of £193 3s 0d. On the opening of the wooden mission room Mr Reed of the Work's Department played the harmonium. There do not appear to have ever been any deeds for this building and a ground rent of 17s 6d per annum was paid to the occupant of No 1 Military Rd, Mrs Edwards.

This building served the purpose of both Church and Church Hall for many years.

1878 On the estate map of the Orielton Estate 1878 the plot is marked as a School. In that year (September 19th) a fund was established called the "St Patrick's Church Pennar Building Fund," to raise the funds necessary to build a more substantial Church in limestone, the Rev. F.G.M. Powell was trustee, with the London and Provincial Bank Ltd, Pembroke Dock Branch. The account was opened with a draft of £50 from Mr. H Smith and £5 from Captain Parkeu was paid in on 30th September.

1879 The first services recorded as having taken place in the "Mission Building" were on July 10th 1879 when there was Holy Communion at 8.30 am with 20 communicants, the collection amounted to £1 13 7d. With The Rev. Powell celebrating assisted by the curate, Rev. A R Wilson. Morning Prayer was at 11am at which Archdeacon Lewis preached and the collection was £4 15s 0d. Litany and an Address to the Children followed at 3pm and at 7.30pm there was Evening Prayer at which, according to the Service Register there were 260 in the congregation. The first Baptisms were those of Walter Lee Clark (adult) and Ethel Elizabeth Facey on August 4th, Lilias Margaret Elizabeth Moore on 28th August, Albert James Noakeson September 7th, Mary Stephens (adult conditional) September 30th, William George Turner (adult) October 9th Martha Devonald December 12th, Minnie Mary Dimmock, Elizabeth Mary Philpin and William Henry Philpin , all on December 18th. The normal pattern of worship was, Sundays 8.30am Communion, 11am Matins and Litany, 6pm Evensong and on Thursday Evenings 7pm Evensong. The number of Communicants varied between 20 and 30 with 22 on Easter Day 1880.

1889/90 From the St John's accounts for 1889/ 90 it would appear that Pennar spent more on Communion wine (6s 0d) than they did on the Curates Fund (4s 6d).

The Rev. J Seymour Allen , who had succeeded the Rev. Powell as Vicar of Pembroke Dock was very determined that a Church should be built to serve the Pennar and Bufferland area.

Acc to Kelly's Directory 1884

Connected with St John's Church is a wooden mission building, at Pennar, with accommodation for 200, here services are carried out almost precisely as at the parish Church : it is contemplated to build a new Church of limestone here, towards which a fund has been started.

Pennar Mission Room

1895 The alter from the Pennar Mission room was removed and installed in the Chapel at the old cemetery (Park St) renovated in 1895

A plot of land was eventually given by the War Office for a new Church on the condition that free seats were provided for Servants of the Crown, and after much fund-raising a start was made.

Pennar School Log records

"1894 May 2nd Commenced afternoon school at 1pm on Wednesday (May 1st) and dismissed at 3pm owing to the Foundation stone of Pennar New Church being laid."

The stone (made by John Phillips Bush St and costing £2 1 6d) was laid by Lady Catherine Allen. The architects were Nicholson and Son of Hereford, the cost of the plans (which originally called for a spire at the north west corner) were £94 14 6d.

The builders were Morgan and Davies of Pembroke at a cost of £2324 most of which was raised by the parishioners

The Church consists of a nave with narrow north and south aisles. The Chancel is continuous with the nave, there is no chancel arch but there is a truss on corbels. The Organ Chamber is at the north east with a Clergy vestry beyond. The Choir vestry is at the North west. There is a Bell-cot with an unusual wheel arrangement at the west end. It is built of squared and random rubble masonry with limestone dressings exposed externally and plastered internally. The roofs are slated with diagonal boards internally coated with three coats of linseed oil put on hot. The floors are wood block. The porch is situated on the south side with the font just inside the entrance.

1895 On July 7th 1895 the last service was held in the "Mission Church" and the register closes with the note that " On July 11th St Patrick's New Church was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of Swansea and a new book was commenced" The collection at this service was £65 19s 6d.

1895 The Consecration celebrations where on quite a lavish scale, Luncheon was provided for 200 guests and 500 Order of Service sheets were printed although only 144 seats had been purchased.

The Service pattern for the new Church was 11am Communion or Matins and Litany alternating, 6pm Evensong, with the number of Communicants varying between 30 and 50.

Christmas day 1895 saw 32 take Communion

1896 Easter Sunday 1896 there was a total of 139 (the collection was £2 11 8d)

1895 The Organ installed, which is still in use was the one which had been removed from St John's in 1890 stored in St John's Hall and then installed in St Patrick's, after a thorough renovation, by Springfield Wood Works, Huddersfield, at a cost of £30. it was repainted by J Henderson from Albion Square

1979 this Organ was surveyed by Geo Ormond & Co. Ltd., Taunton, who said of it that " The Organ was built by Volkes is approximately One Hundred and Sixty years old and is very dirty and worn. It has not been dismantled for many years, and thorough restoration should be considered to prevent further deterioration of this valuable Instrument". It still had the bellows and the handle to pump them but had a blower fitted. Mrs Betty Lomax nee Betty Davies played it for many years and her Husband was sextant.

Above the Chancel steps are two carved heads, believed to represent Henry VII and his wife Elizabeth of York. These were carved by Mr. Chas. Henry Williams of 4 Charlton Place , He also did some of the carving in Monkton Priory, the pulpit in St John's Pembroke Dock and the South African War Memorial in Carmarthen.

1895 The first to be Baptised in the new Church were Florence Amy Saunders and Violet Constance Mabel Pheonix both on July 16th 1895.

1904 The Church grew rapidly with the number of Easter Communicants in 1904 being 143 (six more than the previous year) and the average number attending Sunday School being 165. The organist was Miss Bickford and Mr. B Owen of 13 Military Rd was the Sexton

1907 Mr. G Edmunds was the organist with Mr. Thomas of Swan Row as Sexton. The sidesmen were Messrs. Bowen , M Griffiths, L John, J Phillips, J Russan, W Venable, W Wilcox, T James, Easter Communicants totalled 147 and the average attendance at Sunday School was 163.

1910 On February 25th 1910 a new Alter was dedicated, it was presented to St Patrick's by the parishioners of Christchurch Swansea. The Vicar, Rev. D L Prosser (later Bishop Prosser) took the service, Lt. Buchanan read the lessons and Mr. H Russant conducted the choir.

1919 The account book for 1919 reveals that the Organist was Mr. Frank Grant-Jones and the Choir Master was Mr. G Russan, Sexton was Mr. Rogers , 3 Sycamore St., and the sidesmen were Messrs W J Ayres, J Harries, W James, F Morse who was also Treasurer, G Morse, M James, W Phillips, J Russan, James Thomas & G Woodley. Easter Communicants numbered 169, baptisms 28, the average in the Sunday School was 107 with 30 teachers, there was also a choir of 25.

1913 the old wooden hut originally used as the Mission Church and being used at that time as a Church Hall was getting a little worse for wear. The Rev. Prosser organised fund-raising for a new Hall and by 1923 the funds had risen to £1200 but to buy the land, build the school, the wall and the railings another £1000 was needed. In his parochial News letter dated May 1st 1923 the Rev. Prosser (later Archbishop of Wales) called upon all the other Churches to help raise this money at a grand fete to be held in the Market House on July 18th and 19th. This raised £335 18s 11d .

1923 Money was also raised by the people of the area contributing a small sum regularly each week. The account book shows that the largest denomination per week was 6d but the average was 3d. The Church accounts dated 31st December 1923 show that there was still a shortfall of £568 but the money was raised and the new Hall built. The Priest in Charge of Pennar at the time was Rev. E O Phillips and the sidesmen were Messrs J Coldrick, W Davies, J Edden J Harries, T Hill, W James, J John, W R Morse, W Williams, D Harrington, F James, T J Noot, J Williams, C Williams, & J Russan. The organist was Miss Ethel John, choirmaster Mr. J Thomas , and Sexton Mr. Beazley High St. with Mrs Gay and Mrs James appointed as District Visitors to administer the Poor relief Fund. Numbers in the choir had risen to 52 but the number attending Sunday School was only 95 and there were 220 Easter Communicants.

1924 The old wooden hut which has served Pennar as Church, Church Hall and Sunday School for over forty years, was sold to Mr. A Brown for £18 10s. in 1924. In the same year , the choir stalls were altered to accommodate a larger choir, St John's lent St Patrick's some pews, the Organ blowers wages were increased to 8s 6d per quarter and the trees around the Church given by Thomas Meyrick were planted (there were originally two copper beech trees).

The Church Committee Minute book of that year also records the loan of a set of drums to Pennar Regatta and later on the fact that they were never returned.

1924 St Patrick's Church processional Cross and Missal Stand are of particular interest, designed by Mr. Coates Carter , architect for the Church Hall and exhibited in a design exhibition, they were given to St Patrick's by him on 18th August 1924.

About this time the kneelers, the angels around the altar, and other items were given to St Patrick's on the closing down of the Dockyard Chapel.

1927 gas lighting was introduced while on the Church committee complaints were being made about the "hooligans" who had broken panes of glass in the windows of the new Church Hall.

The flag pole, now overtaken by the Beech tree, was erected in anticipation of the Coronation of Edward VIII.

Part of the grounds of the Church were laid out as a Tennis Court and there was a thriving tennis club and a badminton club using the Hall. The Hall was also used by the School as classrooms.

During the war it was used for civil defence classes and also played a part in providing shelter for the firemen fighting the Tank fire blaze. Part of the room underneath the stage was reinforced as an air raid shelter.

1950's there was a Scout group based there, the dances held there are remembered by many, there was a unit of the Girls Friendly Society and this association with young people is carried on as today it is the headquarters of the St Patrick's Guides and Brownies as well as being used by other organisations in the Community.

*Baptised by a Nurse

[For many Years I served a Reader and Church secretary at St Patricks but after I refused to stop wearing my University hood as both Vicar and the Curate had been asked “why they did not have one” I was ordered by the Vicar never to set foot in one of the parish or deanery Churches for refusing to obey him as he was Vicar, Rural Dean and a Canon of the Church].

Pennar Education

Until the creation of the Dockyard the only schools in the area would have been in Pembroke. A Grammar School was established there in 1690 and was housed in part of the old Town Hall (pulled down in 1820). It was a “free” school usually the schoolmasters were clerics and was described as “excellent” in the eighteenth century.

With the new influx of population in the early nineteenth century, there rose a demand for education. Several small private schools were set up including two by what is now Bethany Corner but which used to be Bethany Square.

In the street by the side of the Bethany Chapel, called now Bufferland Terrace, but once known as Barclays Row stood the house of Mr Barclay a well educated man, who had in his younger days given lectures on astronomy and natural philosophy in the principle towns of Great Britain. Here in the back room of his house in which the furniture consisted of three desks, one table, six benches, a small map of the world and a black board, which compared with many of the other schools of the area meant that it was very well equipped, he conducted a school for no more than twenty pupils, mainly the sons of farmers, tradesmen and mechanics. Of course only those whose parents were able to pay the fees could attend.

1847 The Inspectors (The State of Education in Wales) report states “the manners of the lads were very rude and they amused themselves by mimicking their master”. Although the Inspector also stated that their reading ability was high and some of the copy books were exceedingly well written and besides the three “Rs” students also studied navigation and astronomy. Mr Barclay also ran a night school five evenings a week for adults at which the average attendance was twelve and the Inspectors report on the educational standard of one of the adults he taught was very favourable.

1847 The other school was held in the back room of the Public house (Caledonian), the furniture consisted of three tables, six chairs, five benches, and a sofa. The School Mistress was the daughter of the innkeeper. The pupils of this school were quite young, mainly the children of tradesmen, but they were able to Read part of St Matthews Gospel and their copy books were quite well written considering their age.

1840s the National School closely followed by the British school were built in Pembroke Dock and again pupils who could afford to pay could attend those

In Pennar the free schools where small Sunday schools attached to and organised by the churches and Chapels, the main schools were in Pembroke Dock.

1874 a new school was built for Pennar in TreOwen Rd by the borough of Pembroke School Board. It opened on January 5th and there were 29 pupils all of whom had to pay, which could be quite a drain on a poor families budget. The number of pupils soon averaged 70. Attendance was interrupted by pupils having to help earn money by helping in the potato fields, setting gardens, fetching water, (there was no piped water supply in those days and water for the weekly wash and drinking had to be carried from the wells or springs) picking blackberries, and collecting cinders (used for paths). Some children did not attend at all in the summer months, but in spite of all this the Inspector’s report was that those scholars present passed a good examination in the elementary subjects. The writing in the lower standards was particularly good. In 1889 the school, which had been mixed, became girls only, the boys having to go to Albany Square.

1891 The staff in 1891 consisted of the headmistress, one teacher and two pupil teachers; that year education became free, parents no longer had to pay fees.

1901 There were alteration and modifications to the Infants part of the school buildings which caused disruption to the classes.

1904 Headmistress of the Girls school was Mrs M J James assisted by Miss Ruby Gwyther, S E Young, E Jenkins, E Brown, and M Charles. Of the Infants school headmistress was Miss A Lloyd, assisted by Miss W Cullen and M Edwards.

1923 From the time of the building of St Patrick’s Church Hall in 1923, till the closing of the opening of the new Junior School in 1970 the Hall was utilised by the school as classrooms and as a Hall.

1949 The school remained a girl's school right up till 1949 when it became a Junior Mixed School with boys under 12 being transferred from the Coronation. The first male member of staff actually joined in 1948 the same year that the old gas lighting was replaced. The boys had to cross the road to go to the toilet by the "temporary" class room, the hut now used by Rudd as a Joiners workshop. Originally a cast iron urinal it was replaced in 1944 by a rendered brick urinal. (it backed onto a deep gully leading down to Jacob's Pill and there was a lot of speculation as to whether it drained into this gully rather than into a sewer. I know what we believed, anyway, the smell was terrible)

1956 the new Pennar Infants School was opened in Cross Park .

1959 first Headmaster of the Junior school was appointed.

1970 The Pennar Junior School finally moved out of the old premises in TreOwen Rd and into the new ones in Owen St on January 16th 1970.

The old School buildings still retain an association with children as today part of them are used for a Playgroup and family centre.

Pennar Disease and Disasters.

1850's Pennar from the 1850s seemed to have been hit by several epidemics of infectious diseases.

1853 Cholera which was so severe that a public letter was written on the subject by Lord Palmeston,

1857 Smallpox in 1857,

1866 Cholera struck again in August 1866 spreading Throughout Pennar, but is alleged not out of the area because the people of Pennar sealed themselves off.

29th August 1866 The first person to die was a man named Peter Morris age 48. The victims had to be buried within twelve hours and such was the rapid spread of the infection that on 29th August 1866 as well as Peter Morris, also buried were Emma Jones age 28, Margaret Griffiths 11 months, and I. Day age 29.

2nd September Thomas Charles Powell age 32 months, Seth John Stephens, age 12 months, and George Jenkins age 12 months were buried. The next day only one,

3rd September William Wilcox age 25 years

5th September Ann Preese age 40

6th September the death toll had again risen, Maria Morgan age 6 years, Anne Stephens age 26 years, and John Ormond age 28 months.

7th September Elizabeth Ormond buried .

8th of September was the worst day with five victims being buried, like all the others in Park St Cemetery by the Curate of Pembroke Dock, Rev. George Edward McHugh, they were Michael Birmingham age 5 years, Mary Williams, age 57, George Davies age 5 months, Elizabeth Price age 75 years and Mary May age 56 years.

10th September Ann Jones age 39, Stephen Morgan age 9 years, and Jane Preese age 59 were buried.

14th Ann Jones age 48 buried

15th John Jones age 72

16th Mary Ann Jones and Fanny Jones both age 14 years

17th Mary Ann Jones age 74 and Elizabeth Vaulk .

19th Thomas Mabe age 62 and Mary Griffiths age 23 the last two victims.

1867 Scarlet fever raged, it struck again in 1909.

1879/80 Typhoid with over twenty people being affected but fortunately all recovered
The Curate of the time records in the Church Magazine that the problem with the health in Pennar was, that, although these diseases were preventable and that warnings had been given both after the 1853 and the 1866 outbreak, "We would again call attention to the water supply, which is generally admitted to be the viaticum of typhoid fever, and which we hear is in a worse state than ever".

1875 Findley wrote in 1875 of the water supply to the town in general that "save that of the Government dwellings, occupying two or three small Streets near the dockyard, and which are supplied from the reservoirs the water supply is furnished by wells in different parts of the town, and by Tanks attached to most of the houses. This supply is believed to be adequate to the wants of the community (remarks made by members of the Town Council at a meeting to discuss the sufficiency of the water supply of Pembroke and Pembroke Dock) but it is fairly open to doubt whether it would be found equal to the demands of exceptional dry seasons, which may reasonably be expected, and for which it should be the object of the Town Council to provide".

1892 Smallpox was present, many children, and parents who could, went away, others were re-vaccinated.

With the turn of the century came measles and influenza, the latter was exceptionally severe in 1915 and 1919 when the Baptismal Register for St Patrick's Church records young babies being baptised by the Nurse.

1920s after the closure of the Dockyard, the area was hit with a diphtheria epidemic. The old offices of the Shipbuilding Company by Jacobs Pill being used as an isolation Hospital. After that time these scourges seem to have been less violent, probably because of better health care and an improved water supply.

There were two great disasters which affected the whole of Pennar and which are still talked about, the Ferry disaster of 1889, and 1940/41 with the Tank Fire of 1940 and the Blitz, but there were earlier disasters which caused great consternation.

1830's smuggling was rife as was wrecking in some parts of the county, The Preventative Officers were keen to catch a man called Truscott who they suspected of smuggling and tried to trap him. A quantity of tobacco had been smuggled in to South Cliffs and one of the Preventative Officers, posing as a customer had persuaded Truscott to deliver it to Bentlass. That night Truscott, his friends, the tobacco and Truscott's young son who had just been taken along for the trip were waiting in Pennar Gut near Bentlass, they were approached by a boat load of Preventative Officers, rowing with muffled oars, Mr Larkin in charge.

The Preventive Officer's boat was spotted by Truscott and he and his friends started rowing as fast as possible up river towards Pembroke. The preventive boat was rapidly overhauling them so the young boy jumped out of the boat and tried to swim towards Jacob's Pill.

According to his account at the trial, the mate of the preventative boat shouted three times for him to stop before shooting him in the back of the head and killing him. There was a tremendous outcry Throughout Pennar and the whole area, with meetings at Bethany Square, Pembroke and Pembroke Dock. The Preventative Officers had to be escorted to and from Pembroke Town Hall where the trial was held, by Marines, The mate was found not guilty but for his own safety had to be moved from the area.

With the river so close to Pennar it is not surprising that many of the tragedies in the area should be linked to water.

1850 while playing with his friend, John George, Joe Jenkins ducked under water by Jenkins Pill and drowned, passengers on the ferry from Bentlass saw the commotion, the ferryman diverted to the site and a man called Truscott (a relative of the smuggler), a passenger on the ferry, repeatedly dived to try to rescue the boy but when he finally recovered him, the boy could not be revived.

It seems strange today to think that one hundred years ago, the ferry from Bentlass to Pembroke Dock was a major way for the farmer's wives to bring their produce to Market at Pembroke Dock. It was also in constant use ferrying workers who lived that side of the water over to the Pennar side from where they would walk over the Barrack Hill to the Dockyard. The ferry was actually owned by the Orielton Estate but the ferryman at the time was a Mr John Jones who had been ferryman for about 35 years.

1889 That day February 8th 1889 he had taken a boat load of women over to Pennar in the morning, which were on their way to Market at Pembroke Dock. He had a lad 15 year old lad helping him Henry Gullon from Bankers Row Pembroke (where the moat House is now) It was late afternoon , getting dusk when the women returned to Pennar ridge, and there was a choppy sea with the tide ebbing against a strong wind. The boat was quite heavily laden with the nine people on board and all their shopping.

Part way across, according a witness, spray broke over the boat and one of the women stood up and moved over to the other side, then a wave struck the boat which started to sink leaving everyone in the icy cold rough water.

All nine on board drowned, they were John Jones, ferryman, Henry Gullon, his assistant, Maria Hird of west Grove, Mary Ann Griffiths, her servant, 13 year old Mary Davies of Bentlass, Mrs Nicholas of Newton and her daughter Hannah, Mrs Jane Harris and Mrs Melville Morris of Brownslade.

The inquest verdict on the ferryman was that the deceased and those with him met their death by the accidental upsetting of the boat.

1940 Some may today remember the second tragedy when on 19th August 1940 three German aircraft attacked the Admiralty fuel Tanks at Pennar. Said to be the worst fire in Britain since the great fire of London

Fighting the fire five firemen were killed and many more injured. Despite having been at war for nearly a year with a strong military presence the area was not prepared. Vernon Scott has described this event graphically in his book Inferno 1940. Pennar was heavily involved many houses were destroyed or damaged, both the School and the Church Hall where occupied by Firemen fighting the fires at the Tanks despite the fact that if the Germans attacked either of those buildings there were no Air Raid Shelters at the time although part of the room underneath the stage at the Church Hall was reinforced so as to provide some sort of shelter. In fact when the school classes did resume the senior pupils attended in the mornings and the juniors in the afternoon because of lack of Shelters, although a committee had attended the school to consider plans for shelters on September 25th 1939.

Despite several Air Raid alerts the shelters were not completed till February 1941

Another author W L Richards gives a very detailed description of these events in his book Pembrokeshire Under Fire.

There was a also an accident in the defensible barracks in which 19 servicemen were killed during group training on mine disposal.

The old Civil Defence Headquarters opposite Bethany Chapel was purchased by members of the 1st Pembroke Haven Scout group parents committee and converted under the supervision of Don Brickle into a new headquarters for the group.

Kyngswode

There are very few Early Records of land use in the area during the Middle ages unless land came into the direct control of the Crown. This is a small part of the Inquisition into the Estate of Aymer de Valance held on August 20 1324. He as Earl of Pembroke held all of South Pembrokeshire and much of the North although some parts of the estates were still held under the old Welsh laws. Because of the minority of heirs the records have survived for the Grange of Kingswood during the early 14 century. From the extent of the land held by the manor it would seem that much of the land which is now Pembroke Dock was part of the manor. These records do not record any land being held by the Paterchurch family who, until the 1360's, are not recorded as holding land of the Earl, or as tenants of a land holder.

Paterchurch

I am a “Yardie”. Every day, for a large proportion of my working life, I would walk or cycle along the Dockyard wall past a very old stone tower and through the Dockyard Gates.

From a boy, when I explored the site of a ruined building and a plague graveyard; as an apprentice shipwright at Devonport when I worked in my spare time on the St Budoc Chapel site and then under, the supervision of Miss V. Ledger Keeper of Archaeology at Plymouth, researched and worked on the Plymton Priory dig; historical research has always been my main interest. The St Budoc site we found was that of a pre Norman Celtic Christian Church with a graveyard. Deserted when a larger Church was build in the 14c. Some of the buildings of the settlement had been incorporated into a battlemented farmhouse and there was also a huge tithe barn which had been used up to the 1950's as a store.

The Paterchurch tower site and the early drawing by General Adams kept on reminding me of this site and also pre-Norman saints and their disappearing sites elsewhere. Rev George Noakes, when he visited St Patrick's Church Pennar, commented that he was surprised as in the whole of his diocese the modern Church at Pennar was the only one dedicated to St Patrick and there was every possibility that St Patrick, like St David, Teilo, and Deniol had studied at Caldy Island. When told about the old name for part of the area as Pater Church or Patrick's Church he speculated that there would have been an old Celtic Christian Church on the site.

We know from the remains of a Church found under Steynton Church dated by Laws as being coeval with the Ogram stone (5 or 6 century) and the Church found near Brownslade, that the early churches were very small.

The Liturgy of St Deniol (St Daniel's Church Pembroke the tower of which shows evidence of wooden floors and fireplaces) an early manuscripts believed to have been used in the Bangor area, gives us an the life of an early Saint and his settlement.

The graveyard found near Brownslade records at least one hundred east west burials without coffins in graves whose sides were lined with stone. Only one had a stone cover and that one, besides the remains, contained a stone slab with a cross inside a circle scratched on it. (E Laws). Nearby is a much larger 14c Church.

De Patrick's Church, the name of the early family means “of Patrick's Church” but although I can find no trace of them owning land there I am reminded of the tenants of Castlemartin and Llanphey who took the name of the area in which they lived. So I ask myself if there was a Celtic Christian Church on the site giving the area the name, pre-Norman and certainly pre Dockyard. Also as far as I have been able to ascertain there was no real question about the site having been that of a Church and it was always accepted as one with its own graveyard until the 1850's when the Dockyard wanted to expand. Yes the members of Arch Camb after they had been shown around the Dockyard and entertained royally stated it was domestic building but looking at their program for that day (Arch Camb 1851) would not have been able to really examine the building they just did not have time. The Dockyard was the town, they planned it, most of the leaders of the town owed there position to the Dockyard. St John's Church, the National School, the local Market all Dockyard supported and it was the main source of employment. Who was going to say a word against them.

Paterchurch tower and ruins where sketch by Gen Adams 1811

In Monkton, when remains were found under the Church floor they were reburied in consecrated ground. In Pembroke Dock they were sacked up and reburied without any sort of service or prayer in unconsecrated ground although a marker was supposed to have marked the site I could not find it and was told by an old historian that the contractor had destroyed it when the gas works for the Dockyard was built. He also said that the contractor had no luck as his children drowned and the Dockyard was unlucky after 1852.

(As regards the contractors children they died in 1831 before the new extension was built.)

2013 5th July Acc/to Western Telegraph Newspaper Pembrokeshire County Council are putting Pater Church Tower a Grade 1 listed building up for sale

Acc. to Mrs Peters (History of Pembroke Dock 1905) The 1st Earl of Pembroke, Gilbert de Clare granted Pater Church or Patrick's Church to the Commandery of the Knights of St John, who were established at Slebech, They are credited with having built a Church and outbuildings on the land for the purpose of holding missions for seamen.

I have research the records of the property of Slebech Commandery and the Knights of St John by J Rogers Rees Arch Camb 1897,98,99. in which he lists the donations to the Commandery from its foundation and could not find the donation she mentions. Roger de Clare made several donations c1158 but there does not appear any that could be linked to the immediate area.

The History of Pembroke Dock Web site has a copy of a map not dated but pre 1814 which shows the Paterchurch buildings and one marked as a Chapel

In his booklet "The Parish of Pembroke Dock" Silas T Phillips (1898) recorded that when the Dockyard walls were built human remains in considerable quantities were unearthed. They had all been buried in regular order and were removed to a neighbouring field

He quoted from Archaeologia Cambrensis Vol. VI 1851 which also stated that David de Patrick Church had a residence here and that (maybe quoting Fenton)

"his daughter and sole heiress Ellen, about the 1st of Henry VI married John Adams of Buckspool, of whose posterity in the reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary and Elizabeth served in Parliament for the town of Pembroke".

The RCAM report Paterchurch

The RCAM was set up in the early 1900's by Royal Warrant and included among its members:- Sir John Rees, Professor of Celtic Studies Oxford University; Edward Anwyl, Professor of Celtic Studies Aberystwyth; Robert Carr Bosanquet Professor of Classical Archaeology University of Liverpool; Robert Hughes President Cardiff Cymmrodorion Society; Griffith Hartwell Jones Doctor of Divinity Rector of Nutfield; William Edwin Llewellyn Morgan; Hon Lt Col; Evan Vincent-Evans, Sec. Honourable Society of Cymmrodorion; Henry Owen, Dr of Civil Law, Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries; Sir Evan Vincent Evans; Lt Col. Joseph Alfred Bradney C.B.; Sir John Morris-Jones Master of Arts, Professor of Welsh, University North Wales.

They visited the Paterchurch site in May 1923 just before the closure of the Royal Dockyard.

I personally am not qualified to disagree with any of their findings (or local tradition) and so just attach their report.

B H J Hughes BA (Hon)

The introduction to their report (Page li) states

Paterchurch

“It is gratifying to be able to recognise in a sadly debased ruin the tower of a Church of which only the name has survived. It may not prove uninteresting to set forth briefly the manner of its recovery and identification.

In examining the collection of watercolours and pencil sketches of Mr Charles Norris, a resident of Tenby between the years 1790 -1840, for the purposes of the present volume, we came upon a charming sketch of the entrance to Milford Haven which embraced an view of the land now occupied by the royal dockyard of Pembroke. The only habitation then on the site was a small residence which appeared to consist of or to contain within its grounds a square tower of Pembrokeshire type. Apart from a brief reference in Fenton's Tour (p 274) 1810 in which he speaks of it as “a fort, a work left unfinished” and the inference from the place name, the Commissioners possessed no information of the previous existence of an antiquity here, but Mr Norris's sketch appeared to warrant further enquiries. The Lords of the Admiralty gave a cordial assent to our visiting the dockyard, and were so good as to furnish us with the following extract from their Departmental records:-

Extract from Admiralty Records

“In consequence of the passing of this Act 30 Geo. III, c. 5a, section 2a 26, of an application from the Hon. C. F. Grenville, on behalf of Sir William Hamilton for a lease of the land to dig stone, the property was ordered to be surveyed, this was done in November 1790. An enlarged plan of the ruins of the Paterchurch Mansion is given on the other side which together with the sketch copied from the original in the possession of the Adames' family made by Lt. General Adams about 15 years after the Survey, gives a fairly accurate idea of this house.

Skulls and other human bones have been dug up in the neighbourhood of the Tower which the uninitiated have taken as a decided proof that the tower was originally part of a Church. One writer, referring to the discovery of skeletons says, " it evidently indicates that a monastic establishment had at some early era existed there, the word Llanreath given to an adjoining Hill, proving the fact; Llan meaning Church in the Welsh language."

A glance at the plan and at the parish register of St. Mary's Pembroke in which parish the property is situated places the question beyond doubt; the skeletons were unquestionably those of extinct Adam's' or Patrick churches, a number of whom must have been buried in the family churchyard situated either within or close to the building marked as ruins of a Chapel. The entry in the St. Mary's register in the year 1731 speaks for itself and is as follows:- (Indecipherable, supposed to be January) 11th Buried ye son Rogar of Mr. William Adams in their own Burying Ground.”

Paterchurch (6in Ord Surv. Sheet, Pem 39 NE)

“With the exception of the name Paterchurch, the Knowledge and recollection of the Church so styled seems to have past completely from the minds of men; it had vanished, and left not a wrack behind. The story of its re-discovery had been set forth in the introduction to the present volume, so that it is unnecessary to do more than to record its archaeological history and present appearance.

A little over a century ago Richard Fenton, in his tour through Pembrokeshire (p274) (1810) spoke of it thus:-

“Descend with the tide and leaving Lawrenny to the right, proceed down the Haven (of Milford) as far as the fort, a work left unfinished, to excite a reproach that it ever was begun, and to remain a monument of the scandalous waste of public money The spot on which it stands is called Pater or Patrick Church and was purchased by the Crown for the above purpose, of the late Sir William Owen, being an inexhaustible bed of limestone, of which great hewn blocks the fort was built. Above the flat on which it stands, under a gentle rising are the remains of an ancient mansion, formally the residence of David de Patrickchurch, whose daughter and sole heiress, Elen, about the first (year) of Henry VI married John Adams esq. of Buckspool, and brought him a large dowry, the whole of the peninsula from Cosheston to Pennarmouth."

Fenton 's narrative does not make it clear if he mistook the tower which he mentions for the ruins of a small military structure, or whether he regarded it as a family mansion built after the style of a medieval Peel Castle, and he does not seem to have been sufficiently impressed by its appearance to pay a visit or to make enquiry respecting about it.

Architecturally, the present remains consist only of the tower of the Church, and this has been subjected to such indifferent treatment that it is evident it owes its continued existence solely to the strength of its walls, and the uses to which its different floors could be turned as store rooms. It is at present so clothed with ivy that the stonework is completely hidden on all sides except one, on which can be traced the now closed entrance which led from the tower into the nave of the Church. The tower is thus shown to have stood on the north side of the edifice. Nave and Chancel had probably no structural division, and it is not likely that there was a aisle or transeptal projection on either side. The roofing of the nave probably started immediately below the line of corbels which extended above the doorway. The tower stairs occupy a turret which is placed at the north-eastern angle of the tower; the stairway opens from the interior of the tower.

The ground storey is vaulted after the regular fashion of the Pembrokeshire Church towers, and for rude ribs of masonry spring from different corners of the chamber to a central boss. Clumsy intermediate ribs have been added, doubtless to strengthen the floors when the tower was made into a store. The first and second storeys, also rudely vaulted were added at the same time and for the same reason. At some period after the Church had ceased to be used as a sacred building, the tower archway was built up. Upon the ground once occupied by the Church itself, and around three sides of the tower, various premises connected with the work of the dockyard have been erected, but on the east and south-east the land has not been built upon. This spot is still known as the Cemetery, and it is authoritatively stated in the letter quoted below that burials have been met with during trenching operations. – visited 27th May 1923.

Historically, the little Church may be conjectured to have been connected with Monkton Priory, and to have followed the fortunes of that house. Monkton itself, being affiliated to the French house of Seez, was taken into the King's possession at every violation of the peace with France- the last occasion in the reign of Henry V- and its inappropriate churches would meet with the same fate. Placed at the entrance to the great Haven of Milford which was well known to French sailors, Paterchurch, as a position in enemy hands, would have been a menace and a danger, so that it may have been desirable to suppress it altogether. At any rate, quite a century before the dissolution of the smaller Monasteries, it had passed into the possession of a grantee named Adams, who probably was a newcomer in the county ((footnote) The first Adams to appear in the public records is Henry, who was sheriff of the county in 1587; but the Welsh genealogist, Lewis Dwnn, provides the family with a pedigree, which starts with a John Adams, who is said to have married Ellen, daughter and heir of David de Paterchurch, c1422.

It is possible that the small estate of Paterchurch passed into the family of Adams to the heiress of an earlier possessor, though the parties to and date of such marriage cannot be identified.

It is equally probable that the Church and its endowments were purchased by a local landowner at the dissolution of Monkton Priory.

The family increased its prestige, but the only member who appears to have risen to local eminence was Sir Nicholas Adams, whose Inquisition post mortem(Pub. Rec. Office: Chancery Series II,vol 446 no 63) certifies that he held the manor of Paterchurch.

At the annual meeting of the Cambrian Archaeological Association, at Tenby, in the year 1851, the following communication from Sir Thomas Pasley, Captain Superintendent of Pembroke Dockyard, was Read:-

“During the progress of the excavations in 1844, by workmen employed by Mr, Henderson, the contractor for the extension of the new boundary wall of the dockyard, number of skeletons were found deposited about three feet below the surface of a meadow; near Pater Church. These relics appear to have been buried without coffins, as no vestige of any, either wood or stone, could be discovered. On being exposed to view, they were found lying with their heads towards the east, surrounded with stones rudely placed on their edges, and arranged in a coffin-like form, but without a slab either underneath or above them. Twenty-eight skulls had already been found. One of the most perfect skeletons measured six feet four inches from the ankle-bone to the crown of the head. Many speculations were indulged in as to the origin of this cemetery, which was evidently of great antiquity; it is however not improbable that, from the tower still standing amongst the ruins in good preservation, it was the burial-ground attached to some monastic institution. It is to be regretted that neither history nor tradition throws any light on this interesting subject.. All that can now be collected is that the ruins of Pater or Patrick Church, were formally the residence of David de Patrickchurch whose daughter and sole heiress, Ellen, about the 1st of HenryVI married John Adams esq.. of Buckspool and brought him a large dowry (the whole of the peninsula from Cosheston to Pennarmouth), several of whose posterity, in the reigns of Henry VIII, EdwardVI, Mary and Elizabeth, served in Parliament for the town of Pembroke.”

The members of the Association visited Pater during the meeting, when it is said that “their attention being naturally directed first to antiquarian researches, they first examined the ancient tower which was unhesitatingly pronounced to be a domestic , and not an ecclesiastical building” (Arch Camb 1851 II, ii, 320 and 322).

(They had also visited Pembroke and therefore did not have much time at Pembroke Dockyard were they were entertained royally.)

A word as to the name. This has varied between Paterchurch and Patrick-Church according , as it would appear, to the opinion that the patron of the earlier Chapel was Patrick or Peter. The style Pater (pronounced Patter) is a possible derivation from Patrick”

NB I have checked the early Slebech records, the records of the inquest on the property of the Earl of Pembroke 1323 and of the property of Monkton 1377 at the second confiscation of the alien priory by Richard 11 but without trace.

About 1889 further burials were uncovered by the Works Department inside the yard but it was recorded that exposure to the atmosphere reduced the remains, with the exception of the teeth, to dust although there was a suggestion that some remains were stored in the tower pending disposal.

The discovery of the burials had gave rise to the conjecture that the tower was part of a religious building but this was discounted in 1852 when it was reported that the tower had a vaulted structure with heavy ribs and was domestic in character. Could this have been to prevent an outcry about the buildings, which, apart from the tower, were pulled down by the Admiralty soon after, even though the Admiralty records of the survey of 1790 actually state that there was a burial ground there and that the building was at that time marked on their map as ruins of a Chapel.

More bodies were unearthed in the extensions to the Dockyard in 1854. These were reburied on what is now the site of South Pembrokeshire Hospital and marked with a stone. It is not known what happened to the bones unearthed in the rebuilding of the 1890's except that it is believed that for a time they were stored in one of the rooms of the tower.

The tower, which stands within the old dockyard boundaries on the southern shore of Milford Haven, is approximately 35 feet high. The walls tapering from 4 feet to 2 feet 6 inches thick, and from the top there is a magnificent view to the west of much of the Haven. At the north-east corner of the tower within the walls there is a spiral staircase. Each floor of the tower is made up of one room accessed, from the spiral staircase. The first and second floors have a fireplace in one corner. The flues rise clockwise to two chimneys at roof level and which originally rose above the parapets. Above the stone vaulting of the second floor there is room for another wooden floor. This is very much like the interior of St Daniels Church where the tower has rooms and the remains of two fireplaces plus evidence that there were previously wooden floors. The rooms are quite well lit quite small, about eight feet by nine and a half but could obviously be lived in

Fortifications

Since the 16 century, there had been interest in fortifying the Haven and various plans had been proposed with the building of the two blockhouses at the mouth of the Haven in 1580 as the first practical scheme to be started. George Owen drew up plans in 1595 but these were not implemented.

In 1756 Lt Col. Bastide, Director of Engineers surveyed the area and advised that a series of forts be constructed around the Haven. One of the sites suggested was Paterchurch. These were modified due to the expense and after a further survey by Lt Col Justley Watson; three forts were agreed of which one was to be built at the site of Paterchurch.

In 1759 there was another survey of the area by Captains Herriot and Walker. It was proposed to be purchased for His Majesty's Service at Paterchurch point, land "for fortifying the Interior Part of Milford Haven, according to Colonel Skinners design

The original area of land required by the Board of Ordinance was 63 acres which included the garden, the orchard, a wooded area, the house and farm yard. This land had been acquired by Sir Arthur Owen who had purchased the whole Paterchurch estate of 230 acres from a group of people over the years 1716 to 1718 for £2518. There had been problems with the original purchase as there appear to have been conflicting claims of ownership. The Board of Ordinance purchased the required area from from Sir John Owen

The tower and ruins were originally outside the fenced in area of the Yard but were eventually incorporated into the dockyard and later the crumbling walls of the old ruined mansion were pulled down and the tower left standing. In 1832 a plan was made for the Department of Ordnance showing the ruins.

In the late nineteenth century there was a back wall, about three feet from the northern wall of the tower itself and which may have been joined on to the stone staircase. It is also similar in structure and appearance to the Old Rectory at Angle. The dimensions of the building and measurements suggest that the tower could have been on the north eastern corner of the house,

General Alexander Adams, may have been responsible for the addition of the oriole window on the south side of the first floor, illustrated in the 1923 Royal Commission Report. It is not shown in the in the water colour sketch of a similar view made by Charles Norris in 1812. It could however have been added later by Edward Laws, who was the occupier at the time of the tithe apportionment's in 1841.

Little is known about the origins of the Paterchurch estate before 1422 but it is alleged that in 1422 the estate of Paterchurch, said by Fenton to have stretched originally from Pennar Point to Cosheston came into the possession of John Adam(e)s of Buckspool through his marriage to Alson or Elen the daughter of David of Patrickchurch or Paterchurch. Little is known of the antecedents of David of Patrickchurch, though records of this family have been traced back as far as 1247.

(Henry Owen in his Old Pembroke Families 1902 p76 gives only a passing mention three times of the Paterchurch family but no details at all and only mentions the name of the Adam's family once)

Close Roll 49 Edward III m 3d (Cal pp286 7 8)

the said feoffees, namely, the said Walter, John Donne, John Plat and Ralph de Walsham, came before the Council at Westminster and there delivered the said schedule closed as aforesaid, which was before the Council opened, and there viewed and understand (French text follows), whereby the said earl gave the said feoffees knowledge of his will, charging and requiring them, if he should die over sea before returning to England, of the issues of his said lands to levy and pay his debts, in case full execution of his will might not be by his executors made of his chattels, and then in case he should die without an heir of his body to amortise the manor of Tovenham to the Church of St Paul, in order to keep his anniversary every year and to find twelve wax candles throughout the year, burning at reasonable times about his tomb, and if there should be any impediment wherefore the said manor might not be amortised, to sell the same and pay the money thereof arising to the profit of the said Church and the “chartehous” in London, for the purposes aforesaid, charging them also in case he should die without issue to enfeoff the King of the Castle and county of Pembroke, the Castle and lordships of Tyneby and Kilgaren and the commote of Oisterlowe, and to give to his cousin, Sir William Beauchamp, and to his heirs for ever, all other the Castle, manors, lands, etc., in England and Wales, which the said feoffees had by his feoffment, and the reversion of the Castle, town and lordship of Bergev[eny], and of all the manors, lordships, lands, etc., held in dower by Dame Mary de Seint Pawl, in England and Wales, upon condition that he shall bear the whole arms of the said earl, and shall prevail with the King (face tant eidees nostre Seigneur le roi). That he may bear the name of earl of Pembrok to him and his heirs, and if he will no or may not do so, to make a feoffment and grant of the premises to his cousin, Sir William de Clynton, upon the same conditions, this schedule bearing the date in the same earl’s inn in London, 5 May 1372; whereupon the said feoffees there professed that they ever were and are ready to their power truly to fulfil all the wills and conditions in that schedule contained and to do nought contrary to the earl’s will; and the said William Beauchamp, after appearing in person before the Council in presence of the said feoffees, averred, in so far as the matter therein contained concerned him, that he was ready for himself and his heirs to perform the same according to the earl’s will namely to bear the whole arms of the said earl and to make suit with the King and his heirs that he and his heirs should have, receive and bear the name of Earl of Pembroke in case the said earl should die without issue, praying the King and council and the said feoffees to keep whole and unimpaired the estate and right of him the said William and of his heirs therein; but because the said earl dying over seas has an heir of his body, who is now within age as the council is assured, it is determined that the King shall have the wardship of the said castles, manors, lordships, lands, etc., until the lawful age of the said heir, saving to Anne, who was the wife of the said earl, her dower of the same.

,[enfeoffment was the deed by which a person was given land in exchange for a pledge of service. This mechanism was later used to avoid restrictions on the passage of title in land by a system in which a landowner would give land to one person for the use of another]

(My Own Thoughts - were the De Paterchurches in service to the Earls as landless retainers but living at Paterchurch which was being used as a look-out and was land apportioned to them at the time of this will.)

1790 According to Hon. C F Greville, who tried to lease the site to extract limestone “The house has neither roof, door nor windows; the wind and the thieves have been so diligent.

The building was used for the storage of corn belonging dockyard workers in 1818.

Much of the ruins were pulled down in 1854 and the tower left, one room of which was used as a pattern makers shop. Later a small outbuilding was re-roofed and used as a plumbers shop.(It was in this plumber's shop used by the Works dept. that I was shown by Alfie Lloyd (Plumber) pieces of bone which he said "the Doctor said were human" and a tobacco tin containing old coins and harness buckles and broken knife blade all of which had "turned up" around the Paterchurch remains. When I said I thought they ought to be in a museum it was pointed out that the "bosses (MOD) would not like it.") alongside the Pater Church buildings was a two roomed cottage occupied by Ann Davies who it is said sold beer and biscuits.

Up to 1844

Elizabeth and Nicholas had a son

1608 Adams William 1608 who was 20 years old when his father died in 1628 and he inherited the estates During the Civil War the estate was badly affected and suffered substantial losses It would appear that William Adams supported the Parliamentary side and tried to claim compensation for the damage to his property which included Paterchurch On August 19th 1646 he brought a petition to the House of Lords stating that “When the enemy (Royalists) were in the County, he voluntarily gave way for firing divers of his houses in the suburbs of Pembroke He was afterwards obliged to take refuge with his wife and child in Pembroke and the enemy fired his houses and corn and drove away all his cattle” There was a certificate attached from Laugharne Major General and Poyer, John attesting to his fidelity and great losses The petition was recommended to the House of Commons for compensation but it is not known how much compensation, if any was paid

1650 Adams William died about 1650 and the estates were inherited by his son

1670 Adams Nicholas The property must have been rebuilt because it is known that Nicholas lived in it and paid on seven hearths Hearth Tax

The first wife of Nicholas Adams was Bowen Frances daughter of Bowen Rhys of Upton Castle and they had a son,

1655 Adams Rice or Rees c1655 born

1691 Adams David 1691 died before that date,

1691 Adams Frances 1691 was alive when her father died

After the death of his first wife, Frances, Nicholas married Lort Hester, daughter of Lort Sir Roger and they had a son Adams Roger

As a marriage settlement to provide for any children of the second marriage, Nicholas split the Buckspool and Holyland estates from Paterchurch. Thus after the death of Nicholas land that had been part of the Family estate since 1422 was divided (in 1628 whole estate was only worth £34 9s 4d annually, Paterchurch and St Mary's parish property £17 13s 8d annually)

1691 Adams Roger son of the second marriage, who inherited the Buckspool and Holyland estate was Commissioner of Subsidies in 1692 and in 1695-6 and Commissioner of Land Tax in

1705 He married Skyrme Jane daughter of Skyrme William of LLawhaden and was Mayor of Pembroke in 1695 He died in 1708

When Nicholas died his eldest son Adams Rice brought a Bill of Complaint against the Gwynnes, who were the guardians of his step brother Roger In this complaint he estimated that the whole estate, including Buckspool and Holyland as well as Paterchurch brought in a clear income of £200 per annum (but in 1628 only worth £34 9s 4d annually). Rice was experiencing financial problems, due in part to bad harvests but also because of the marriage settlement of his father, a considerable portion of the income of the old estate went to his stepbrother. He still occupied the Paterchurch estate but had been raising a series of short term loans using parts of the estate as security. The Paterchurch estate consisted of the tower, the house and other buildings including a farmhouse together with land around and some neighbouring Properties.

1687 Adam Rice borrowed £650 from Meare, Margaret who was his tenant at East Llanion using the property at East LLanion, Imble, Furzy Close and Cuckoos Wood as security for a period of twenty years.

1689 Adam Rice borrowed another £200 from her for 72 acres around Paterchurch Margaret Meares died in 1690, her heir was Owen John and Rice borrowed more from him

1696 Adam Rice owed £350 on a £700 penalty bond which been given to cover some of the arrears and interest that were outstanding on the loans

1697 Adam Rice's debts totalled £1831 4s and he was indicted in the Court of Great Sessions He and his wife entered into an indenture of lease and release of 230 acres of the estate with Gwynne Richard for £2,100 on October 2nd 1697 and after the debts were paid off Rice received £268 16s The estate in the indenture consisted of -

“All that capital messuage tenement and lands with appurtenances commonly called and known by the name of Paterchurch and all of those closes fields and parcels of land commonly called and known by the several names of the Hill Yards The Great Park alias Great Cow Park the water park the middle and Long meadow and west meadows the great Croft or lays the coney gare or Warren the stoney wall park, neap Hay, the Wood orchard, fruit orchard, Gardens, fish pond and waste ground containing in the whole 230 acres of lands be it more or less All situate lying and being in the parish of St Mary in the liberty of the town of Pembroke in the county of Pembroke between the lands of Owen Sir Hugh Bt in the possession of Ferrior Jenkin the lands of the said Rice Adams in the several possession of Daniell John, Hobb William and Whelling Nicholas on the south and east sides and the sea and river of Milford on the north and west sides thereof”

1698 Adams Rice died at Paterchurch in June 1698 and in his will he anticipates at least £500 from the sale of the real estate He appeared to still own Imble(?), Cuckoos Wood John Daniell, west Lanion and/or Eastermost House Hobbs William and Ferry Hill Whelling Nicholas but he had used these lands as security. The amount he had borrowed was due to be repaid before November 1707 to Meare Margaret and Owen John. Gwynne Richard trustee of that part of the estate inherited by his stepbrother Adams Roger was supposed to pay off the debts using the funds from the sale of the 230 acres of land to redeem for Rice Adams. By the time of Adams Rice death in 1698, Gwynne Richard had not paid off the debts as agreed.

1701 Adams Elizabeth brought a writ against Lloyd Hugh and his wife Lloyd Joan in November 1701 for sitting and kneeling in a seat that went with the “demesne, messuage and lands called Llanion”, in St Mary’s Church Pembroke. At the time the Lloyd s were the tenants of the property which was still part of the Paterchurch estate

1702 Gwynne Richard died in 1702 without paying off the debts and in 1718, £898 12s was paid to Owens, George, son of Owens, John , by Gwynne Thomas There was then an indenture passing the remainder of the estate of 230 acres (excluding East Llanion , Imble, Furzy Close and Cuckoos Wood etc) to Owen Sir Arthur

Old buildings and features in the area pre 1812

Paterchurch Farm situated on the North side of Barrack Hill then known as Patrick’s Hill facing the Dockyard Gates on the north side of what is now Victoria Rd Paterchurch Farm was occupied in 1812 by Mr. Francis White whose family had occupied it from 1776

On the Top of Barrack Hill was a hedge running to Llanreath, separating the flat top from the sloping ground. Flat top was called Redwood

There was a cottage on the site of the Fortified Barracks occupied by a haulier called William Connick, Pennar (old) Farmhouse occupied by a Family called Price in 1667 then by 1670 the Ferriors.

Nearby was the toll house built in the 1830's

Llanion House

The former house stood to the north of Pembroke near Biers Pool farm, and the inlet on the nearby coast called Lanion Pill. An early medieval Welsh manuscript records that at 'Llonyon yn Penvro' beehives and swarms of bees were kept, giving rise to the proverb 'o heid Llonyon'. Another manuscript compiled in 1600-19, mentions the family of Bennet, the last of whom was Hugh. There were diverse knightes, as is said, of the Benetts, and their mansion house was now a decayed house at Munston, and they were lords of Mirian, Bernards Pools in Landian alias Laniell (Lanion) near Pembroke and in diverse other places in Pembrokeshire.

The last of the Benetts had three daughters and heiresses: 'the one married James ap Eynon of Kenerth, of whom Mores ap Owen is descended and inherited about £50 rent by that descent; the other married Bowen of Roblinston who hath the manor of Llanien; and Lutterell is heire to another daughter, and all three have lands in Merriam'.

For some years Llanion formed part of the estate of the Meares family. George Meares gent was at Llanion in 1665 and five years later was assessed at four hearths. Edward Byam, an Antiquan Merchant, finally settled at Llanion

The Holcombe family occupied Llanion for a few years in the period 1751-63. It then passed to the Meyrick's who lived there occasionally. In 1786 J. F. Meyrick, esq., is described as owner-occupier of Lanion, and the land let to Thomas Kinaston. However, by the first decade of the next century it had fallen into decay. Fenton informs us in 1811. Lanion, a seat of John Meyrick esq., till of late years almost constantly inhabited by a succession of different tenants, temporary residents in the county, but now unroofed and suffered to fall into decay, as Bush, his principal family residence lies so near in a situation much more commanding than the other, though in some respects inferior in point of beauty'. Rees, writing in 1815 describes it as 'now in ruins'.

The Parish of Pembroke Dock – Silas T Phillips 1898

Within high walls and surrounded by a belt of trees stood formerly the mansion of the family of the Meyrick family of Bush, Pembroke and Apley Castle Shropshire.

There is some reason for believing that the land at one time was a possession of the See of Llandaff and it may be that Llanion is but a corruption of Llan Ioan (John's Church). Perhaps successive Bishops of Llandaff felt it incumbent upon them to maintain a priest and Chapel on this remote corner of the episcopal estate – no trace remains of a Chapel if it ever existed.

1905 the author Mrs. Stuart Peters wrote, 'to the east of Bierspool may be seen the ruined walls of Llanion House, the original country seat of the Meyrick family. Lord Nelson was sometimes a guest at this old house, and it is said that once or twice he was accompanied there by Lady Hamilton.' --- It must have been very draughty as the house was in disrepair by this time and there is no actual record of either Nelson or Lady Hamilton visiting this side of the Haven.

1846 On June 5th 1846 an uncoffined skeleton was dug up in what was Llanion Park.

(Neither John Hogg [Lost in Time 2010] nor I could find a drawing of the house or a plan although we both searched. I did visit the site and see the remains of what I suspected was the House but they were very scanty)

The narrow footpath from Water St to Front St is a right of way for vehicles, being a continuation of the old parish road branching off from what is now King William St. The road originally led from the town across the site of the Railway Goods Yard (where a Lime Kiln once stood) coming out near the Gas works at the back of Mr. George Thomas's mineral water factory, then on to the lower road, the exit being a little to the west side of Bierspool Farm.

On the site of Mr. ElFord's Sawmills formerly stood a thatched dwelling house known as Foreshore House

Pembroke Dock-yard The Beginning

1812 A disagreement in 1812 over the exorbitant price being demanded for the Milford site resulted in the Navy Board seeking land for a dockyard elsewhere on the Milford Haven Waterway. Master shipwright Mr. William Stone, of Plymouth, gave a favourable report on land at Pater Church Point, part of which was already owned by the Government's Board of Ordnance. They agreed to sell the 20 acres four fields, for £3,000. The sale was completed on January 7th. 1813, and later a further 28 acres including a stream, were bought for £5,500. Acc/to Mrs Peters (see below I think this was the land sold by Mr Meyrick

1810 Mr. William Stone (Master shipwright) surveyed the area and in October 1810 reported on the suitability of Paterchurch Point.

1812 On October 12th 1812 the Admiralty took over, from the Board of Ordnance, a portion of land at Paterchurch Point Approx. 20 acres in extent (part being below the High Water Mark) through their Master shipwright Mr. Stone. Col Pilkington acted for the Ordnance Department.

1813 March 10th Mr. Meyrick accepted £3000 for four fields to the east of and adjoining the Government Land. 20 acres approx.

1814 Jan 20th Ordnance Dept. surrendered 39 acres of land to the Admiralty

1814 April 28th The Admiralty purchased 20 acres and a stream of water from Mr. Meyrick for £5500 and took possession on June 7th

1822 The Admiralty purchased 37 acres 3 roods 29 perches of land from Mr. Meyrick. This land consisted of part of Paterchurch Farm and the Farmhouse tenanted by Mr. Francis White

1828 Admiralty purchased 9 acres of Paterchurch Farm part of Barrack Hill from Mr. John Francis Meyrick.

1830 the Yard was extended, The Admiralty received 13 acres of land from the Ordnance Dept. and gave them the whole of the land purchased in 1822.

There were no roads into the area the main access being by sea although there was a track from the hamlet of Pennar running from the old Farm house up what is now Gay's lane straight across Military Rd and down the little lane directly opposite up King's Lane and from there it used to go , before the Defensible Barracks was built, across the Barrack Hill This track joined, at the old Farmhouse, the track which connected Pennar with Pembroke. There was also another track which linked the Pembroke with Pembroke Ferry and there was a track from that which ran past Beirspool, King William's Way, what is now the bottom of Water's St., then on to the bottom of Meyrick St., where there was a stream running down from the High St Ridge, along what is now Front St and then on the Paterchurch complex.

According to Mrs Peters and numerous other writers

The harbour at Milford Haven had been extolled by no less an authority than Admiral Lord Nelson himself. When negotiations to establish a Dockyard at nearby Milford Haven failed, the Navy looked elsewhere and purchased land at Paterchurch, with the ambition of building the only Royal Dockyard in Wales.

Nearly 50 acres of land was bought from the Meyrick estate for £8000 and work began apace, with a low paling fence run around the site and a frigate, Lapwing, being run ashore as offices.

So began an illustrious history of shipbuilding for the Royal Navy, with over 260 ships (including 4 Royal Yachts) constructed in 112 years. The development of permanent facilities in the yard, such as slipways, offices and workshops, continued alongside the building of housing for the workforce and by 1831 the town had a population of more than 3000. By the 1870s wooden ships had given way to Iron warships and slipways and workshops had to be extended to accommodate ships of up to 14 000 tons such as Repulse in 1892.

For well over a century the name of Pembroke Dock was synonymous with the Royal Navy. Ships built at the town's Royal Dockyard served in every corner of the world.

Yet, when Vice Admiral of the Blue, Lord Horatio Nelson, sailed up the Milford Haven Waterway in the summer of 1802, the area now occupied by the town was all Green fields.

Nelson would have seen the Government battery at Pater Point, the old mansion of Paterchurch, a few farms and cottages and the roofless home of the Meyrick family at Llanion.

Within 12 years, however, all was to be transformed. After the negotiations by the Admiralty to buy the land at nearby Milford -where warships were already being built for His Majesty's Navy – broke down. A new site was selected and the move saw the birth of Pembroke Dock,

According to Findlay

“In 1812, a misunderstanding took place between the ' Government and the late Honourable R F Grenville proprietor of the land at Milford where there was a dockyard. The consequence was that Mr. Stone the master shipwright, whose observant eye had discovered the advantageous situation of Pembroke Dock for a naval arsenal of the largest recommended it to the Government, who on surveys being made took advantage of the proposition, and, in 1814 planted the nucleus of the present splendid establishment”

He goes on to say

“Since that period, as its resources became more and more available, it has continually been extending its efficiency until arriving at its present momentous magnitude; and it not rivals, but in most instances exceeds all other maritime magazines that stud our sea-girt isle, in natural advantages, as well as in cheapness of shipbuilding It is said that King William IV., when visiting it in the position of Lord High Admiral, remarked many peculiar points of superiority, “it must become of the utmost advantage to the British nation””.

What do the actual documents say

“WE beg leave most humbly to recommend to Your Royal Highness that Your Royal Highness will be graciously pleased to establish, by Your Order in Council, the yard forming at Pater as a Royal dock yard”

1815 George, Prince of Wales, acting as Regent in place of his demented father, George III, gave the Royal Assent to this submission from the Navy Board and the Order in Council, signed on 31 October 1815, established not only a new royal dockyard but also a new naval town.

It was not a good time. Waterloo, fought on 18 June 1815, had ended the Long French wars and ships by the hundred were returning home to pay off. The existing Royal Dockyards had now more than enough capacity to support the much-reduced peacetime Royal Navy.

Pater Yard, however, had existed de facto for some years and its first two ships were well advanced. The Navy Board had committed public funds to the county twice in a decade and was no doubt reluctant to abandon its investment. The Order in Council served to regularise what had begun as a wartime expedient down the harbour at Milford.

A Royal Dockyard on Milford Haven arose from the Navy Board salvaging work from a bankrupt contractor. During the Long French wars the Royal Yards did not have the resources to build large numbers of new warships, maintain the expanded fleets and cope with repair of battle-damaged vessels. Battles could not be forecast, and repair work disrupted and delayed ship building and increased the costs.

The Navy Board therefore depended on private yards where new vessels could be built without interruption. During the Seven Years War two warships were built under contract at Neyland.

Richard Chitty launched the frigate HMS Milford in 1759, and in 1765 Henry Bird and Roger Fisher launched the two-decked HMS Prince of Wales on the same site.

The Navy Board looked to Pembrokeshire again in the revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars, contracting with Messrs Harry and Joseph Jacob of London for new warships to be built on the foreshore at Milford. When they failed the Navy Board completed the ships, renting the site from year to year. As “timber and iron could be bought there cheaper and workmen obtained in abundance on lower terms than at any other place where ships are now generally built”.

The Board proposed to buy the site and establish a Royal dockyard there. A sale figure of £4,455 was agreed with Charles Francis Grenville and an Order in Council dated 11 October 1809 gave authority to buy the land

“May it please your Majesty”

“Whereas certain papers were referred by us to the Commissioners for revising the civil concerns of your Majesty's Navy, respecting the building of ships of war at Milford Haven, where a line of battleship, a frigate, and a sloop have already been built, and the said Commissioners having stated in the 15th report that timber and iron could be bought there cheaper, and workmen obtained in abundance on lower terms than any other place where ships are generally built, which has since been corroborated by comparing the expense of the " Milford " a 94-gun-ship recently launched there, with the expense of ships of the same class built in your Majesty's other Dockyards, we deemed it expedient instead of the uncertain tenure by which the building ground at Milford Haven have hitherto been held of Mr. Grenville from year to year, at a certain annual rent, that the same should be purchased and conveyed in trust by your Majesty to the Commissioners of the Navy, and with this view directed the Assistant to the Civil Architect and Engineer of the Navy to proceed to Milford and fix a valuation on the quantity of ground sufficient for the purposes of a Naval Dockyard, and this officer having reported that the sum of £4,455 is the full and proper value of the piece of ground in question, which sum the proprietor agrees to accept on condition of an Act of Parliament being procured, at the public expense, to enable him to convey the same by a good and sufficient title; we do humbly propose that your Majesty will be pleased to authorize us to complete the purchase of the said piece of ground, to be employed as a Dockyard for building your Majesty's ships, the same to be placed on the extraordinary estimate of the Navy, and we do further propose to your Majesty, that the regular establishment of the Dockyard at Milford Haven shall be as follows:

Mr. Barallier, builder, with a. salary of.. £600 a year,

A Clerk to the builder.. £120

Mr. Louis Chas. Barallier, assist. to builder. £300

One Foreman £200

Two Quarter-men, each £140

One Storekeeper without a clerk £300

One Porter £ 60"

Grenville however had died on 23 April 1809. His brother, Robert Fulke Grenville, who succeeded him as a life tenant of the estate, refused to accept the price and, in consequence, an order was issued, directing the Navy Board, on 3rd August 1810, to suspend the improvements then going forward on the premises and on the 16th October 1812, finally to give up possession at Midsummer 1814.

1809 Shortly after the agreement of 1809, the Barriers returned to France Louise Barallier became Principal Naval Architect at Toulon. Although Britain was at war with France and they were Frenchmen they had been the principal Architects at one of His Majesties Dockyards

Mr. William Stone who had come from the Plymouth Yard was appointed Master shipwright in their place.

The Pater site was a good choice for a dockyard. It was one of the few places on the waterway where flat, land gave on to deep water and a good anchorage.

1814 The dockyard facilities were transferred over the following few years to Government land at Pater and the last personnel finally moved out in mid summer 1814 with the completion of HMS Rochfort.

1814 Jan 20th Ordnance Dept. surrendered 39 acres of land to the Admiralty and the first building slip and the excavation of a dry dock was put in hand.

1814 April 28th the Admiralty purchased 20 acres and a stream of water from Mr. Meyrick for £5500 and took possession on June 7th

1822 The Admiralty purchased 37 acres 3 roods 29 perches of land from Mr. Meyrick. This land consisted of part of Pater Church Farm and the Farmhouse tenanted by Mr. Francis White

1828 The Admiralty purchased 9 acres of Pater Church Farm part of Barrack Hill from Mr. John Francis Meyrick.

1830 the Yard was extended, The Admiralty received 13 acres of land from the Ordnance Dept. and gave them the whole of the land purchased in 1822.

1814 By May 30th 1814 the whole of the establishment at Milford had been transferred to the Pater yard as it was called. As many of the men lived in Milford a beacon was placed on Carr rocks to guide the workmen travelling by water.

The Dockyard was governed by its own officers, Quarter-men who really acted as watchmen helped to guard the establishment had wooden sheds erected for their accommodation.

They were assisted by a party of Royal Marines who were accommodated in an old ship the Dragon which had been hauled above high water for this purpose. It was also used as a Dockyard School for apprentices. The first schoolmaster appointed was a Mr. Good, but a Mr. Bonniwell had acted as Master before that.

1816 The first ships, Valorous & Ariadne were completed by early 1816, and housing for the Dockyard workers had began at Front Street. The Ariadne was the last command of Captain Frederick Marryat the author, who wrote Mr. Midshipman Easy and Peter Simple

Over the next 108 years, over 250 ships were to be built for the Navy - from sixth rates of 1816 to an oilier of 1922, 1823 In 1823 a police force was instituted to replace the caretakers who had been responsible for security in the yard. The initial force consisted of a naval lieutenant Lieutenant Weatherley RN., one inspector, two sergeants and twelve constables. The off-duty constables were expected to March with their Officer to Church every Sunday. The force was found to be insufficient and was reinforced by the addition of 500 Royal Marines from the Chatham Division complete with a Drum and Fife band that played every evening before last Post was sounded on the Market corner by Moore's the Chemist. The Marines were also employed in levelling and repairing the roads in the Dockyard.

1832 In 1832, when the Navy Board was succeeded by the Admiralty, the practise of appointing a Naval Captain to be Captain Superintendent of the Pembroke Dockyard was introduced

The fortunes and development of Pennar from 1814 were closely linked to that of the Royal Dockyard at Paterchurch, later Pembroke Dock. At first most of the labour force consisted of men transferred to the new yard from the old one at Milford who travelled up the Haven from Milford by boat and landed just inside Pennar Gut where the boats could float at all stages of the tide. They left the boats there in the care of an old woman, Bessy Bradley who lived in the cottage by the Point and walked over the Hill via Mr. David Price's public house "the Dolphin" and then to the Dockyard. Mr. Price had a marvellous orchard and brewed his own beer but there was a suspicion that it was well watered as no fights ever took place because of it.

Their numbers were considerably augmented after 1815 by the transfer of the now surplus craftsmen from other Royal Yards. The town planned by the Admiralty and laid out on a chessboard pattern, was originally known as Pater. A proposal to call it Melville, after the First Lord of the Admiralty, received a cool reception, but, ironically it was the Admiralty which did change the town's name. All the goods sent to the new yard were addressed to Pembroke Dock the 'Dock' name stuck.

The founding fathers of Pater were thus largely, but not exclusively, new men. Most established men came from the west Country, shipwrights from 'Plymouth Dock' as Devonport was known until 1823. These Devonians and Cornishmen - the Seccombes, Saunders, Tregennas, Willings, Trevennas (and later the Trewents and Treweeks) - although of Celtic stock, nevertheless constituted the most radically distinct influx into South Pembrokeshire since the arrival of the Flemings in the twelfth century. They and their descendants, with the people of Milford created Pembroke Dock.

The Royal Navy in 1815 was by far the most expensive single commitment of central Government and the largest industrial organisation in the world. With its supporting dockyards the Navy embraced a wider range of specialist professional skills than any other industry. Some of the innovations had great influence Throughout the industrial revolution. The block making plant developed at Portsmouth Dockyard at this time was the first example of a conveyor belt system for production.

Pembroke Dock developed as a specialist building yard but its limited facilities denied it the established status of the Home Port dockyards which were also major naval bases with victualling depots, rope works, block mills and other specialist facilities. Pembroke Dock had only one dry dock, no fitting-out basins and, apart from Hobbs' Point (completed in 1832 for the Irish packet service not the Navy) and the Carr Jetty (completed in the first decade of the twentieth century), no satisfactory alongside berths for fitting-out newly-built warships. Before the introduction of iron and steel, newly-launched wooden vessels were usually sent round to Plymouth, sometimes Portsmouth, under jury rig for their masts to be stepped, if they were to be commissioned, or to go into ordinary. Early steam paddle warships went round to Woolwich to be fitted with their machinery. Later in the century the large iron-hulled ships had to have their engines and boilers and later also their main armament installed at Pembroke, and be completed for sea, undertaking their initial sea trials from Milford Haven. The completion of newly-launched ships was often delayed until the berth at Hobbs' Point was vacated. However, it is remarkable, that the greatest battleships in the British Navy down to 1896 could be fitted out and completed alongside the tiny, tidal jetty at Hobbs' Point. It was an extraordinary feat of improvisation.

Pembroke and its champions campaigned ceaselessly for improved facilities. In mid-century the Haverfordwest and Milford Haven Telegraph believed that “the only thing required to make the Dockyard complete is the Long talked of; sea wall from the Hard across to Hobbs' Point, thus locking in the Pill, and making it available for a steam factory, steam basin etc. for which its leeward situation.. so admirably fits it”, which works “would be a culminating point from which additional sources of prosperity would spring”. The steam basin never materialised.

1864 Even after the opening of the railway through to the Dockyard town in August 1864, Pembroke remained a frontier post. “Pembroke labours under the misfortune of being 300 miles from WhiteHall. It is an outpost, and only visited occasionally” commiserated the United Service Gazette in 1859, whose writer moreover considered that ‘the increasing value and importance of Pembroke as a building yard, seems lost, in great measure on the authorities.”

Mrs Stuart Peters, recalled in 1905 the visit twenty years earlier of the 'Chief Constructor of the United States Navy' who, she said, reported that “Pembroke is the first shipbuilding yard in the world”. The visitor was Naval Constructor Philip Hichborn USN; he had written that “the best adapted of the British dockyards for building operations is Pembroke.. but having but one dock, no basins, and few shops and stores, is not a fitting out yard, and can only be rendered so at very great expense. vessels built there usually go to Plymouth, Portsmouth or Chatham to complete.” Later historians of the town have likewise accepted uncritically this opinion.

Admiral Charles Penrose FitzGerald, who was Captain Superintendent of the Dockyard from 1893-95, sometimes thought 'that the Admiralty forgot altogether that there was any such place as Pembroke Dockyard.. “our insignificant little Cinderella of a dockyard did not always get everything she asked for, especially if one of her big sisters was asking for the same thing at the same time”

Even when the Long-awaited jetty was being built out over the Carr Rocks after the turn of the century to provide a more efficient - but still tidal alongside fitting-out facility, The Navy and Army Illustrated was unimpressed:

The Jetty which was constructed in 1881 was built for coaling ships and hoisting of machinery and boilers in to position. The sheer-legs were believed to be the largest ever constructed at the time and were capable of lifting over 100 tons they cost £110,000

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty paid their annual visits of inspection to Pembroke Dockyard but they seldom lingered. Artists of the Illustrated London News were attracted to west Wales to sketch the launchings of only the greatest vessels. Even into the twentieth century, as the Dockyard was approaching its centenary, visiting members of the Corps of Naval Constructors “never failed to suggest [to Assistant Constructor Arthur Nicholls] that Pembroke was the end of the world and the edge of civilisation”

Pembroke remained a Cinderella yard, a poor relation of the Home Port dockyards, and the desire for recognition, for confirmation of their worth, was a constant preoccupation of its people.

Some writers have given us vivid descriptions of the yard late 1800's description of the Royal Dockyard

“It occupies an area of eighty acres, surrounded by a high wall, flanked by two Martello towers. There are twelve building slips for vessels of all sizes. There is also a dry dock for repairing them, and enormous stacks of timber of various kinds oak, deal, and larch. The Nasmyth steam hammer and saw mill are particularly worth notice. As it is not a fitting dock, vessels when ready are towed round to Devonport, or Portsmouth to be finished. The dock is defended by a fort to the west, which mounts twenty four guns, and by two Martello towers which each mounts three. There are also large barracks on the Hill above, and a hut encampment at Hobbs Point.

Up to 1864, £175,563 had been expended in fortifying Pembroke Dock

1875 An interesting description of the yard was published in 1875

The entrance to the yard is through a wide gateway near the centre of the south wall, on the right and left of which are the houses of the principal officers who reside within its precincts -- spacious and handsome buildings. The various offices connected with the several departments are imposing in appearance and neatly arranged. The Fire Engine House in the centre of the Yard is an extensive stone building, in which about twenty engines are kept in the most perfect order and ready for any emergency. It may be mentioned that the yard is plentifully supplied with water from the Government reservoirs by means of iron pipes; to these pipes fire -plugs are attached in all parts of it.

“workshops necessarily abound here: there are joiners, millWrights, blackSmiths, plumbers, copperSmiths, coopers, wheelWrights, painters, pattern-makers, and armour plating shops. But among the many we have enumerated, perhaps that of the blackSmiths will attract the greatest attention. Here, are about 200 busy hands all dimly seen working amid heated air smoke, and the glare of the numerous glowing fires of its forges- and on all sides is heard the din, clang and clash of hammers and machinery forging and manufacturing the various kinds of heavy iron work now so requisite in the present advanced state of shipbuilding. Here, also, are three immense steam hammers beneath whose ponderous heads ponderous masses of red hot iron are continually becoming subject to their will. Adjoining is the galvanising shop, where the process of galvanising all the small iron work to prevent it from rusting, is going on”.

"At the west side of the yard are the steam saw mills, worked by the aid of powerful machinery. The sawing room is well worthy of a visit.

To the south of these, where the open space is chiefly used for the stacking of wood, is a large square basin known as the 'pickling pond', in which the elm and pine timber is kept, to prevent it decaying before being used. Near the docks lie numberless armour plates, varying in thickness from two to fourteen inches, destined to cover the sides of those powerful ships of war, which are being constructed in the neighbouring sheds, the machinery for boring these plates for the rivets, and for shaping them to the turns of the ships' sides also exists here."

The description above does not mention the four big sheds in the eastern part of the yard each about 150 feet Long for the shipwrights tool chests. Inside these, rising in terraces, were hundreds of boxes containing the tool kits of the shipwrights. Three gangs of shipwrights could be accommodated on each tier of the shed. The inspector's offices were built at the north end of each tier. The original joiner's shop was a lean building attached to the eastern wall of the yard

The dockyard estimates for the year 1875 are Salaries £11,355 (White collar); wages £103, 016 (blue collar).

A body of the Metropolitan Police exercise the functions pertaining to their office within the Dockyard: this force consists of 2 Inspectors, 3 Sergeants.

The Dockyard and the Town

Lewis in the Topographical Dictionary of Wales gives a picture of Pembroke Dock in 1838 “Pembroke-Dock, sometimes called Pater, or Paterchurch, is situated on the southern shore of Milford Haven, about two miles from the old town. It consists of several Streets of neat and well-built houses, and is partially paved, but not lighted; there are numerous good shops for the supply of the population, several of which are branches from the larger establishments in the town of Pembroke. A handsome inclosed Market-place was erected some time ago. The dock-yard forms an area of eighty acres, inclosed within a lofty wall of stone, and comprises a neat range of buildings for the transaction of the public business, houses for the principal officers of the establishment, and a fort for the defence of the place, mounting twenty-three Long twenty-four pounders. There are thirteen slips for ship-building, some of them adapted for building first-rates; also a dock, which will contain the largest class ships, having an average depth of twenty-three feet. Among the other branches of the establishment are, a Smithery; an extensive pond for the immersion of elm timber; and a steam-engine for pumping out the dock, which also drives a saw-mill, working two frames and a circular saw. Some of the finest ships in the navy have been launched here. Large barracks have recently been built under the superintendence of Capt. Farris, R.E.; they form an imperfect octagon, including an area of more than 6000 square yards, and are strongly fortified with bastions, a wide and deep ditch, and loops for small arms. Besides the government establishment there is a small private dock; and the Irish packet establishment has been some years removed from Milford to this place, with a view to which alteration a very fine jetty was constructed at Hobbs' Point, a few hundred yards to the east of the dockyard; new roads, also, were formed, connecting Hobbs' Point with the main road from Carmarthen, in a new line avoiding both Narberth and Haverfordwest, by which route the mail saves a distance of several miles. In connexion with the packet-station, a large hotel was built by government. The great South Wales railway will have a branch of nineteen miles and a half to Pembroke-Dock, the formation of which will tend greatly to the improvement of the whole district: some particulars of the line are given under the heads of Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire, and a fuller account under that of Glamorganshire. Within the last few years, the fortifications connected with the dockyard have been materially strengthened. About a mile to the east of the dockyard is Pembroke Ferry, belonging to the crown, and held by Sir John Owen, Bart., who underlets it at an annual rent of £105: it forms the shortest and most usual line of communication between Haverfordwest and Pembroke, the distance between which places by the ferry is only ten miles, but by Narberth twenty-five; the fares are, a halfpenny for a foot-passenger, a penny for a man and horse, and a shilling per wheel for carriages. Steam-communication is maintained between Pembroke-Dock and Haverfordwest, Milford Tenby, and Bristol”.

Pembroke Dock became essentially an Admiralty rather than a naval town. The Commissioners of the Navy Board and, after 1832, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, influenced most aspects of public and private life outside the Dockyard walls. Within a few years of its foundation an Act of Parliament was passed “authorising the Commissioners of His Majesty's Navy to establish a Market at the Town of Pembroke Dock . . . and to make Regulations for paving, lighting, cleansing, and good Order of the said Town”. This was followed on 10 June 1825 with an Act enabling the Corporation of Pembroke to relinquish and convey to “the Commissioners of

His Majesty's Navy the Right of Letting the Stalls, Sitings, and other Conveniences in the Market in the Town of Pembroke Dock, and the Right to the Rent, Tolls, and Fees thereof

Findlay in 1875 gives a description of the Market in his day

“The Market Place is a Government Building, erected in the year 1826 It stands at the south-east corner of the dockyard but outside its walls. It is a large and commodious structure, of quadrangular form, having four spacious entrances, with iron gates, facing north, south, east, and west, respectively: the east gate way, facing Pembroke Street, is the more popular approach. The interior contains numerous stalls for butchers, and vendors of goods of all descriptions. In the centre, above the weighing house, is a building used in connection with the Government Savings' Bank business, a branch of which is conducted here on Market Days.

The Market is held upon Friday, but Tuesday is also nominally a Market day. About noon on Friday the crowds that thither to conclude purchases make the scene at that time an animated one.”

Acc./to Kelly's Directory 1884

The Market place, situated in Pembroke street, was a government building, erected in 1826, but is now in hands of the Corporation. The Market, which is held on; Friday, is well supplied with meat, fish, poultry, game, butter, cheese, fruit, vegetables and provisions generally

For some time after its construction the Market building was used by the dockyard workmen to eat their dinner in the covered stalls. Short services were also held there by a shipwright Henry Evans who was a Baptist local preacher, he later became minister of Gilgal Baptist Chapel Pennar. Unfortunately one day a man got locked in and in trying to get back to work climbed over the wall fell and broke both ankles. This led to closing down of this facility. After that, until Mrs Chatfield, persuaded the Admiralty and her Husband, to convert one of the old saw pit sheds into a workman's dining-room with cooking facilities, a Cook, tables and benches with also a reading room, a smoking room and a recreation room, the men had to eat out on Barrack Hill or on the pavement outside the gate.

1853 the Admiralty under the provisions of the Act of George III 54 C 159 July 29th 1814 undertook the responsibility for the Conservation of the Haven

1925 Exactly 100 years later, on the eve of the closure of the Yard, their Lordships still had a finger in every pie - almost literally. In June 1925 the Captain Superintendent was ordered by the Admiralty to inspect the bakeries of Mr. F. Rogers, Water Street, Pembroke Dock, and Mr. A. Farrow, Charles Street, Milford Haven, and to report on whether they were “a fit source for the supply of Bread”

The Admiralty and its principal officers at Pembroke Dock filled the Paternalist role carried out in other communities by the local landed gentry. The lead in founding the National School, for example, was taken by a committee which included Captain Samuel Jackson, the Captain Superintendent, William Edye, the Master shipwright, and other Dockyard officers. The foundation stone was laid by Mrs Edye on 26 April 1843, the launching day of the first royal yacht, Victoria and Albert, and the school was opened on 24 June the following year.

The Navy also played a leading role in founding the first parish Church. The land in Bush Street owned by Mr. Meyrick of Bush Estate was conveyed in August 1846 through Edward Laws, a principal officer in the Dockyard. The First Lord of the Admiralty, the Earl of Auckland, attended by a Marines guard of honour and accompanied by the Band of the 37th Regiment, laid the foundation stone of St. John's Church on Monday 21 September that year. Likewise, in subscription lists for good causes Throughout the nineteenth century the names of Captain Superintendents and Master shipwrights, rather than the local nobility and gentry, usually headed the lists of contributors.

The Ships built at Pembroke Dock

Pembroke's greatest asset and the focus of her prosperity was her thirteen building slips, many more than in any other yard, and these made Pembroke Dockyard the nation's principal building yard for over a century. Nearly 250 warships and other vessels went down the ways at Pembroke in the 106 years which separated the launching of the little sister frigates HMS Ariadne and Valorous in 1816 and that of the fleet oilier Oleander in 1922.

The century of Pembroke shipbuilding witnessed the most profound developments in naval design and construction as sail gave way to steam, driving paddle-wheels and later screw propellers, and wood was overtaken by iron and steel. Successive generations of dockyardies had to learn new skills. Their range and complexity increased as the technical development of war ships advanced apace after the introduction of steam in the 1850s and of iron a decade later. Traditional shipwright expertise slowly gave way to the demands of metal. The rattle of the riveting machines and the fumes from the foundries finally overtook the thud of the adze and the sweet smell of freshly planed oak and pine.

Pembroke-built vessels ranged in consequence from the little cutters HMS Racer and HMS Starling launched together on 21 October 1829, the twenty fourth anniversary of the Battle of Trafalgar, to the colossal line-of-battleship HMS Howe, christened by Miss Harriet Ramsay on Wednesday evening, 7 March 1860, the last sailing three-decked built for the Royal Navy. She was twice the size of Nelson's Victory and, with a displacement of 6,577 tons, one of the two largest wooden steam battleships.

Almost every major ship that went down the ways at Pembroke Dock represented a significant advance in naval architecture or played some remarkable part in British imperial history. The first forty-five years saw the construction of nineteen first- and second-rates, ships which represented the culmination of the art of wooden shipbuilding. Among these was Sapping` Rodney, christened by Mrs Adams of Holyland on 18 June 1833, the first British two-decked to carry ninety guns or more. She was towed into action at Sevastopol in 1854 by the Pembroke-built paddler HMS Spiteful where her broadside of 1470 lb. was employed to effect. 'What a dose of pills for the enemies of Great Britain`, exulted The Nautical Magazine. HMS Rodney was relieved as flagship on the China Station in 1869 and paid off at Portsmouth on 27 April 1870, the last wooden capital ship in active seagoing commission.

The Rodney was followed by Symmonds` outstandingly successful Vanguard of 1835, with her beam of fifty-seven feet the broadest ship in the Navy and the broadest ever built in Britain. She and the Rodney were fierce competitors in the Mediterranean where the ships were regarded as champions of two rival systems of naval architecture.

Pembroke Dockyard played a pioneering role in the development of early steam propulsion. The Tartarus of 1834 was the first of a series of paddle wheel steam vessels which included the famous Gorgon of 1837 and which culminated with the launching by “the lady of Colonel Ellis, Commandant of the Garrison”, on Wednesday, 30 April 1851, of HMS Valorous, the last paddle frigate ever built for the Royal Navy.

Throughout the 1850s the Yard produced the last of the Royal Navy's great wooden line of battleships. The three-decked HMS Duke of Wellington was launched as HMS Windsor Castle on 14 September 1852, the same day as the Iron Duke died at Walmer. Her name was changed in his honour a few days later. She and other big wooden liners of the decade were converted while building to carry steam, being ‘cut asunder’ on the slips and lengthened to make room for boilers and engines. The Duke of Wellington served as flagship in the Baltic during the Russian War. Besides building ships were also scrapped here.

When the “Triumph”, the first ship Nelson was appointed too, under his maternal uncle Captain Maurice Suckling was broken up in 1850, an immense quantity of mercury (quicksilver) was discovered between her frame timbers, evidently the remains of loot taken from Spanish Merchant ships. Of course the Naval storekeeper claimed possession, but the Yardies had their share. The means for carrying the stuff away consisted chiefly of bottles, but, when these bottles were confiscated by Search at the gate, the bare pocket was used. The Dockyard workers silvered the backs of mirrors, using the mercury.

Pembroke's first ironclad was HMS Prince Consort, christened by “Miss Jones [of Pantglas], a Carmarthenshire lady”, on Thursday, 26 June 1862. She had been laid down as HMS Triumph, a wooden screw two-decked, but was completed as a wooden ironclad carrying 4.5-inch and 3-inch iron plates. She was followed by other interim ironclads, the Research, Zealous and Lord Clyde. The latter, with her Chatham-built sister ship the Lord Warden, were the largest and fastest steaming wooden ships, naval or mercantile, ever built. But because unseasoned timber had been used in building her at Pembroke, the hull of the Lord Clyde soon became rotten and, known as the Queen's Bad Bargain, she was sold out of the Service within ten years.

Pembroke, after Chatham, was the second of the Royal Yards to receive the plant required for iron hull construction. The first of the iron ships was HMS Penelope, a twin screw corvette launched in 1867. A year later, she was followed by HMS Inconstant which remained afloat for eighty-eight years, the last Pembroke-built warship in existence. With a speed under canvas of 13.5 knots and steaming at 16 knots she was the fastest ship in the world.

The despatch vessels HMS Iris, laid down on No 2 Slip in 1875, and HMS Mercury, laid down on the adjoining No 1 Slip the next year, were the first British warships built of steel and their marine engines made them the fastest fighting ships.

During the last two decades of the century Pembroke Yard launched a series of major capital ships, beginning with the turret ship HMS Edinburgh, launched by the Duchess of Edinburgh in March 1882, and followed by the Collingwood (1882), Howe (1885), Anson (1886), Nile (1888), Empress of India (1891) and Repulse (1892). The final, and by far the heaviest, battleship built in the Yard was the Majestic-class HMS Hannibal, 14,900 tons, launched on 28 April 1896.

Over the next ten years the yard produced a line of protected and armoured cruisers of ever increasing size. The Drake of 1901, which was commanded by Captain John Jellicoe from 1903-4 was the Longest ship ever built at Pembroke. The last three armoured cruisers were the monsters HMS Duke of Edinburgh (1904), her half sister HMS Warrior (1905), and the Defence (1907). All three fought in the First Cruiser Squadron at Jutland and only the Duke survived.

Some Pembroke ships made their names in distant waters. The little Starling surveyed Hong Kong waters under Lieutenant Henry Kellett where they are commemorated in Kellett Island, the Headquarters of the Royal Hong Kong Yacht Club (Long since joined to the waterfront) and in Starling Inlet in the New Territories.

On the Pacific coast of Canada, Fisgard Island and Duntze Head honour the frigate HMS Fisgard of 1819 (which itself recalls the French invasion of Fishguard in 1797), which served on the Pacific Station from 1842 to 1846, and her Captain, John Duntze. On the same chart Constance Cove recalls the visit there on 25 July 1848 of the fourth-rate HMS Constance of 1846 which was the first British warship ever to anchor at Esquimalt, now the Canadian Forces' main base on the Pacific coast.

Pembroke ships made their mark in both the Polar regions. The Alert of 1856 sailed with the Nares Expedition to the Arctic in 1875 and wintered at Floeberg Beach. North, then the highest latitude ever attained by man.

In Antarctica, the great 12,400-foot-high volcano, Mount Erebus, discovered by Sir James Clark Ross on 28 January 1841, was named after his ship, the bomb HMS Erebus of 1826. She sailed in 1845 with Sir John Franklin on his ill-fated expedition to survey the Northwest Passage and into history.

Many vessels from Pembroke Dockyard met violent ends. The fifth-rate HMS Thetis of 1817, carrying home a valuable consignment of gold, silver and plate from Rio de Janeiro, was wrecked on Cape Frion in Brazil in December 1830.

The big two-decked HMS Clarence, launched in July 1827 in the presence of Prince William Henry, Duke of Clarence, became a training ship on the Mersey where she was destroyed by fire in June 1884.

The following year she was replaced by the Pembroke-built three-decked HMS Royal William of 1833 which was re-named Clarence. She too was destroyed by fire on the Mersey in July 1899. Fire also consumed that veteran of the Chinese opium wars, HMS Imogene of 1831, destroyed in the great blaze in Devonport Dockyard in September 1840.

Some ships met their ends in collisions at sea. The Amazon, one of the last timber-hulled sloops built for the Royal Navy, was lost within a year of her launching in May 1865. She was commissioned at Devonport in April 1866 and two months later, on 10 July, she collided off Start Point with the steamer Osprey and both vessels sank. All hands were saved.

The Pembroke-built light cruiser HMS Curacoa of 1917 lost all but twenty-six of her ship's company when she was cut in two in collision with the Cunarder Queen Mary off the Irish coast in October 1942.

The sea also took its toll of many early Pembroke-built sailing warships which went down the ways at Pembroke Dockyard. The Cherokee-class sloops fared worst. HMS Wizard of 1830 was lost on the Seal Bank off Berehaven in February 1859, the Skylark of 1826 was wrecked on the Isle of Wight in April 1845 and the Spey of 1827 was lost on Racoon Key in the Bahamas in November 1840.

Other Cherokees disappeared without trace. HMS Thais of 1829 was lost on passage from Falmouth to Halifax in December 1833 and the Camilla of 1847 in September 1860 off Japan.

The composite gun vessel HMS Gnat, christened by Miss Mirehouse of Angle in the dark on 26 November 1867, was wrecked within a year when she ran aground on Balabac Island in the China Seas on 15 November 1868.

Perhaps the most tragic loss was that of the training frigate HMS Atlanta which had been launched as the Juno at Pembroke Dock in 1844. She sailed from Bermuda for home on 1 February 1880 and foundered in the North Atlantic, taking with her 113 ship's company and 170 young seamen under training.

Pembroke Dockyard ships fought in most of Queen Victoria's little wars against recalcitrant emirs, rebellious native chiefs and omnipresent East Indian pirates. They also fought in the great wars of the twentieth century.

The first British warship sunk in the First World War was the light cruiser HMS Amphion of 1911, mined in the North Sea on 6 August 1914.

The great armoured cruiser HMS Drake, christened by Mrs Lort Phillips in spring 1901, and the light cruiser HMS Nottingham of 1913, were both torpedoed.

German gunfire at the Battle of Jutland in May 1916 claimed the last two armoured cruisers, the last two major warships built at the Yard, HMS Warrior of 1905 and the Defence of 1907. The Defence, flagship of Rear Admiral Sir Robert Arbuthnot in the First Cruiser Squadron, blew up with the loss of old Sir Robert, one of the Navy's fitness fanatics, and all 893 men on board. The Warrior was so badly damaged that she was abandoned and sank.

The final loss in the Great War occurred a few weeks before the Armistice. The little submarine L 10, launched in January 1918, was sunk off Texel in the following October.

The last vessel launched at Pembroke, the fleet oilier Oleander of 1922, was sunk in Harstead Bay on 8 June 1940 after having been damaged by German dive bombers during the Norwegian Campaign.

The Cost - Dockyard deaths and injuries

Naval histories record the battles and the glory but the high price of Admiralty was also paid in full by the men who built these great ships and by their families. The physical hazards of working in the dockyard were many and often fatal. The Important Case Book maintained by the Senior Medical Officer in accordance with Article 190 of Home Dockyard Regulation's records a Long list of deaths and terrible injuries suffered by Dockyard workers. The terse clinical accounts compiled by Fleet Surgeons a century ago and the occasional moss-covered gravestone are often the only remaining evidence of tragedy. For them there were no drums and no trumpets sounded.

Industrial injuries increased in severity and frequency upon the introduction of iron and steel after 1860 with its associated foundries, forges and machine shops. Falls from staging on the building slips continued to claim lives and hernias were common. To these were now added bumps, injuries with machinery and eye damage caused by flying metal during riveting. Almost every addition to the Navy List from Pembroke Dockyard was marked by a new gravestone in a South Pembrokeshire churchyard or a family cast into penury.

The Dockyard Surgery treated all injuries and serious cases were sent on board the old fourth-rate HMS Nankin, a veteran of the Second China War, which served as the dockyard hospital ship from 1866 to 1895 when facilities were provided on shore. The old Nankin was the end of the road for many.

1881 The case of Samuel Ellis Ball, a fifty-four-year-old shipwright, who lies in Plot G.126 just inside the gates of Llanion Cemetery, was not un-typical. On Thursday, 10 February 1881, Samuel was preparing the 465-ton composite gunboat HMS Cockchafer for launching. He fell from a stage at the stem of the ship into the bottom of the slip twenty-two feet below and was taken out to the Nankin in a semi-conscious state where Staff Surgeon Henry Dawson found head, back and chest injuries and a fractured right thigh. "He complained of great pain", the Surgeon told the inquest, "I attended him for ten days, when he died. The primary cause of death was concussion of the brain."

The Cockchafer was launched at 9 am on Saturday, 19 February, by Miss Philips of Lawrenny Castle. The ship "took the water beautifully, the strains of the band mingling with the cheers of those assembled". Just offshore, Samuel Ball in HMS Nankin was still barely alive. He died four hours later at 1pm.

Even after the turn of the century life in the Yard could be a brutal business.

1901 John Lewis, aged fifty-six, Established Labourer No 595, was painting a bulkhead in the port engine room of the new cruiser HMS Drake on 30 January 1901 when he slipped and fell thirteen feet onto the engine bearers and then into the crank pit. He fractured his skull "and is now totally deaf. In addition he has lost his left eye which he states occurred when building HMS Shannon on 1st May 1875”, wrote Fleet Surgeon Edward Luther. The latter concluded: “His capacity to contribute to his own support is totally destroyed and is likely to be permanent”. Lewis was invalided on 16 April 1901.

The dreaded letters DD in red ink denoted the Royal Navy abbreviation for “Discharged Dead”, the final epitaph of many.

1900 William Williams aged forty-five, Labourer No 1899, from Bush Street, had been greasing cogs in a machine in No 2 Fitters Shop on the morning of 21 May 1900 when he was caught in the machinery. He was taken to the Surgery with a fractured skull and his right hand amputated “all except his thumb”. William Williams received his DD in red ink the following day.

His widow received £193 14s.11d. in compensation from the Admiralty. The following January the Admiralty informed the Captain Superintendent that in future coffins for workmen accidentally killed in the Dockyard were not to be provided at public expense and the Pembroke Dock and Pembroke Gazette reported, “have directed the Yard authorities to recover from the representatives of the late William Williams the cost of the coffin supplied”.

1870 The cost of coffins was a major outlay against which Dockyard workers had to make prudent provision. The Royal Dockyard Interment Society formed in about 1870 “to do away with collections in the Dockyard’ collected weekly two pence subscriptions as an insurance against funeral costs. The scheme ‘has proved an inestimable boon to very many families”, reported the Society’s annual meeting in April 1893.
